West Virginia Has Lots of Apples This Year

The yield of the orchards about Inwood, W. Va., are shown here in a great heap of apples that is five feet deep and eight miles long. By count there are 150,000 bushels of apples in the pile, and the canneries are busy at the job of converting the great crop into myriad tins of apple products.

HEIRESS FOILED

Mrs. Merry Fahrney Pickering, twenty-two years old, of Oak Park, Ill., suburb of Chicago, heiress to the millions left by the late Dr. Peter Fahrney, was dragged from an ocean liner at New York when she tried to sail with her fiancé, Count George Di Giorgio, who was leaving the country at the request of the federal authorities. The young woman declares she will join the count in South America and wed him as soon as she can get the necessary money from her family.

War Veterans' Problems

Not since the period of the World War has the Red Cross faced a greater problem in handling the claims of World War and other veterans. Due to the changes in the regulations covering veterans' claims, chapters all over the nation have been crowded with veteran applicants for relief and for service in preparing appeals. During last year Red Cross home service workers in 3,268 chapters dealt with the problem of 411,124 ex-service men or their families. The chapters also aided 7,346 men still in the regular army, navy and marine corps.

An Army of Children

The membership in the Junior Red Cross last year was 6,629,866 boys and girls in schools, private, public and parochial. They enjoyed volunteer work in hospitals and for orphans, the aged and crippled, and also aided their schoolfellows by providing attention for their eyes, purchasing their glasses, and giving many other types of service to them. The Juniors aid their school work by carrying on correspondence and the exchange of portfolios with school children in other nations.

home three or four days while the process is acute, and then return to school. In many cases the rash is so fleeting as to escape notice. The most effective means of preventing the spread of this infection rests with the parents. If all parents would take a minute each morning to look at their children, particularly at their nose and throat, and inquire as to how they feel and would keep them away from other children whenever they have such symptoms as sore throat, headache, nausea, watery or inflamed eyes, spotted or "strawberry" tongue or a rash, much would be accomplished in preventing the spread of not only scarlet fever but other communicable diseases as well.

About 12 percent of family contacts under 16 years of age contract scarlet fever. This might lead you to believe that the disease is not highly communicable. This assumption is, however, incorrect as many of the contacts are not susceptible. If you are susceptible, to scarlet fever and are exposed to it, you are quite likely to contract this disease. If a member of your family contracts scarlet fever and you are under 16 years of age and you have not had the disease, or a negative Dick-test, your chances for avoiding the disease are best if you stay with some adult friend. You are approximately five times more likely to get scarlet fever if you stay at home with the parents.

fever depends upon accurate determination of the clinical forms of the disease. There are five forms: Moderate, moderately severe, toxic scarlet fever, septic scarlet fever, and surgical scarlet fever.

The methods of treatment are first symptomatic; second, the use of streptococic antitoxin; third, blood serum from the patients who have recovered from scarlet fever; and fourth, transfusions from patients who have recently recovered from scarlet fever. Direct transfusion is found to be the method of choice for septic cases of the disease. Antitoxin is more suited to the toxic variety. Mild cases may become malignant or toxic as early as the second or third day. Early administration of antitoxin reduces the incidence of complications even though it does not entirely eliminate them. Prevention depends chiefly on immunization of susceptibles, early recognition and isolation of cases, and on preserving precautions usual with diseases transmitted by the secretions of the mouth, nose and throat.

Corn-Hog Project May Be Tried In Oregon

Although Oregon is a deficit state in both corn and hog production, Oregon growers of these commodities will be eligible to between three quarters of a million and a million dollars in cash benefit payments next year by joining the government corn-hog production control program, according to latest figures obtained by the Oregon State college extension service.

The government's $350,000,000 program to bring the present corn and hog production within the market demand is intended primarily for the mid-west corn belt, but it is national in scope and open to growers anywhere.

Examination of census figures show that Oregon produced about 224,000 head of hogs annually when the 1930 census was taken, while increases since that time are believed to have boosted this figure near the 300,000 mark. Seventeen of the 36 counties produce 5000 hogs or more a year.

Under the new corn-hog plan a grower who signs up agrees to reduce his corn acreage by 20 per cent and his hog production by 25 per cent. If he raises one or the other crop alone he may sign up for it.

Benefit payments for cutting down corn acreage are based directly on the average production of the 20 per cent to be taken out of corn. Present plans are to pay 30 cents a bushel for the average past production, which amounts to paying a grower cash rent not to raise corn on that much land.

With hogs, a direct benefit payment of $5 a head will be made on the 75 per cent raised after cutting down the production by the required 25 per cent. Thus if a man normally raised 100 hogs a year, he would agree to raise only 75 head. Then he would be eligible for benefit payments of $375 in addition to the sale price of the 75 head raised. Payments will be made from the processing tax already paid.

Clackamas county leads in hog production in Oregon with 24,757 head, according to the census figures. Walla Walla county is close behind with 23,459 and Marion is third with 10,070. Other counties with more than 5,000 are Baker, Douglas, Klamath, Lane, Malheur, Polk, Tillamook, Wasco, Washington and Yamhill.

Extension officials, who will soon be ready to present final details of the adjustment plan, are urging growers to save all sale slips of 1932 and 1933 hog transactions as these will be needed in filling out contracts.
