The Mother Goose Bazaar was a success in every way. Already people are beginning to ask that this be an annual affair. Much of the money will go to make some very useful improvements to the church building. We wish to thank those people who donated materials and who worked to make our Mother Goose Bazaar possible.

The Sunday school and the Girl Reserves are arranging a short program for Christmas eve at the church and it will be possible to attend this short but worthwhile program and get home in time to open the family Christmas packages around the fire-side. Mrs. Phlegley and Miss Peugh form the committee in charge. A more detailed announcement will be given at the community Christmas program Saturday night.

Sauerkraut Recommended
As First Class Food

As the food value of raw cabbage exceeds that of sauerkraut, as much cabbage as possible may well be stored to be eaten raw. Kraut making is an economy measure, however, in preserving cracked or otherwise imperfect heads or other cabbage that will not keep, says the home economic extension service at O. S. C. In spite of the loss of about half of the vitamin C in processing, sauerkraut is still a good food.

To make sauerkraut select mature sound heads. Wash and remove outside leaves. Shred finely. Pack in a clean crock or keg in layers about 3 inches deep. Sprinkle evenly with salt, using from 2 1/2 to 3 pounds of salt to 100 pounds of cabbage. If desired the salt may be mixed with the cabbage before packing. The distribution of two ounces of salt with every five pounds of cabbage is recommended.

Pack moderately tight and place a weighted board on the surface. The brine which forms should rise above the board. Cover the container and allow it to stand in a warm room to ferment. When the bubbling stops (in from one to eight weeks), remove container to a cool place. Seal the surface between the board and sides of the crock or keg with a heavy layer of paraffin or by some other method. The collection of scum destroys the acid and causes spoilage. Sauerkraut may be canned after fermentation has ceased, by processing by the hot pack method one half hour in hot water bath.

A mimeographed publication HE 436 "Sauerkraut" can be obtained free of charge from any county extension agent or by writing the home economics extension office, Corvallis, Oregon.
