ence of Raymond Marlowe, celebrated lyric tenor, who will sing "Indian Love Call" in the pony Indian episode. Mr. Marlowe's hearing of the community enterprise here volunteered to take part.

The pageant proper will open with a depiction of pre-civilization or Maya times. This will include a new feature, the dance of death, to be done by a real Indian girl, with the accompaniment of tom toms. The second episode will depict the life of the early coast Indians. A cannon shot scatters the Indians and projects the third episode, that of the arrival of Captain Grey's ship Columbia. This will roll in on wagons until the ship, life size, with men high up in the riging, is in view. Sea chanties and other atmospheric music will make this scene unusual.

The pony Indians will be the motif of the fourth episode. The fifth episode will show Lewis and Clarke entering the Oregon country, guided by Sacajawea.

The covered wagon episode will come next in which will occur the famed and powerful "Driver's Song", the gay "Oh Susannah", and a faithful representation of life along the Oregon Trail. This will be followed by the 'frontier days' with the historic Champoeg episode, trappers, prospectors, pack trains, pony express, attack of Indians and many other interesting and thrilling features.

An interlude next will portray the cow trails with a lone cowboy's singing plaintive songs on the range accompanied by a melodious chorus all mounted on horseback.

The World War memorial, the post war madness and the Oregon trail of the future will conclude the night event.

First Tea in England

Tea was not brought to England until 1657, and was introduced into the English court by Katherine of Braganza. From the first it was patronized by royalty. When the custom originated, tea was drunk much weaker and in smaller cups than prevailed later. In the second half of the Eighteenth century afternoon tea became a smart social function.

JACK FIGHTS AGAIN

Jack McAuliffe, who retired some years ago as the undefeated lightweight champion of the world, has entered another fight. But this time it is in the political ring. Jack wants the Democratic nomination for assemblyman from Queens county, New York.

...TISH CHAMPION

Henry Cotton, English professional, who captured the British open golf championship in the tournament at Sandwich.

Most Valuable Autograph

The most valuable autograph in the world, according to R. G. Turner in the Kansas City Times, is that of Button Gwinnett, an American patriot almost unknown outside the United States and known to only a comparatively few Americans. Gwinnett, born in 1732, was an Englishman who emigrated to America when he was thirty-eight years old. In Georgia, where he settled, he became a prosperous planter and prominent in colonial affairs. In 1776 he represented his adopted state in the continental congress, affixing his signature, along with other members of that body, to the Declaration of Independence. One year later he died, the result of a duel. Alone, his autograph has sold for $28,500. On a document with four other signatures it has commanded a price of $51,000.
