FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

The bill still offers the foreclosure-threatened farmer the easiest and surest means of holding onto his farm and home. During the past year these debt adjustment committees have provided solutions to more debtor creditor conflicts than any other means of settlement. Although there are some attractive prospects indicated by a casual perusal of the bankruptcy amendment, it holds many serious objections for any farmer, the article continues. A six year purchase plan is one provision and a rental plan of settlement is another, but the prospects are that any farmer taking the bankruptcy route may find himself farming under the jurisdiction of a court. Either way out under bankruptcy the farmer will have good sized payments to meet, he must pay interest and principal or annual rental and all taxes. The court probably may also require the farmer to keep up full insurance on all buildings and will hold him responsible for any deterioration of the property. Certainly, it will not pay the farmer to flirt with bankruptcy where he has any equity at all left in his property. Meanwhile the county farm debt adjustment committee are adjusting the debts of an increasing number of farmers, even those whose equity in their property is near the vanishing point, the article concludes.

A Modern Farable

There used to be a cigar, the RB. On all boxes of it was the slogan, "Not Advertised". Where is it now?

While people have been forgetting that brand of smoking several other cigar makes have been advertising their product. These are the most popular brands, found in every cigar case where ever you go.

Business competitors, in this county and out, are continuously trying to attract customers away from their rivals. Eventually those who make the greatest effort to draw the customers get them. The merchant who depends merely upon his contacts with his customers while they are in his store is at a disadvantage compared with the one who uses advertising to interest customers in their homes.

Twenty years ago the makers of KBs were proud of the fact they did not advertise. Today their competitors are proud that the makers of RB didn't advertise.

The SHERMAN COUNTY JOURNAL goes to nearly every home the county with its weekly news. Advertising in it reaches the people with its message.
