Lawyer: It's worth more isn't it?

In a statement issued as a result of inquiries from numerous policy holders as to whether a policy in another company would not be more beneficial than one which has already been carried for a number of years.

Reputable life insurance companies do not sanction this practice of lapsing policies and re-writing them in other companies, and the agent who encourages the surrender of a policy having an accrued value and replacing it with another is serving his own selfish interests rather than the best interests of the policy holder, according to Commissioner Averill.

A life insurance policy has a definite property value which increases with the age of the policy and a change from one company to another usually means a financial loss to the insured, for the new insurance purchased must be paid for at the advanced age rate. If it is remembered that with the first payment on a life policy an immediate insurance estate has been created and the acquisition costs have been paid, it will be more difficult for the practical agent to induce the insured to make a change.

Policy holders are urged to give should be submitted in writing to serious thought before relinquishing any protection under the policies they now hold, and any plan for an exchange of coverage who would win by foul means.

Insurance Head Warns Of Frauds

Salem, Ore., August 16—Insurance agents who attempt to replace or encourage the replacement of life insurance policies already in force by one in another company, which new policy is purported to be more suitable to the insured's needs, are not only unethical in their practices but are usually doing the policy holder a grave injustice, declares A. H. Averill, insurance commissioner.

the original company who will point out any flaws in any plan of change proposed. If a change in the form or amount of the present policy is desired, your company can make it for you without your suffering a loss.

Beware of agents who want to replace old policies with new insurance.
