Oil Strike on a Delaware Farm

This well, drilled on the farm of United States Senator Townsend, and which struck oil at 400 feet, may be the start of an oil rush in Bridgeville, Del., to compare with those in many a Texas or Oklahoma village. The well was drilled by the Cleveland Petroleum company, which has been studying the region for the past seven years, and which has bought up options on farms within a radius of several miles of the strike.

First in Shenandoah Valley The first white man to visit the Shenandoah valley was Louis Michelle, a Frenchman, in 1707. He was followed in 1716 by Governor Spotswood and his Knights of the Golden Horseshoe. The first settlers to enter the region were Germans and Scottish-Irish who came in from Pennsylvania in the early 1730s.

Tiger, Bear Fight All Day Raging all day, a battle between a tiger and a wild boar near Jhanshi, India, ended late in the evening in a victory for the tiger. The two were seen fighting early in the morning and their cries could be heard during the day. The tiger was exhausted after killing the boar and he could hardly walk, so a policeman shot it.

HI-WAYS TO HEALTH

by ADA R. MAYNE

OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

In order to get the most from her food money, the housewife must be able to pick and choose from among the many advertised food products. Although the consumer is protected by state and federal laws requiring the branding of foods, there seems to be many ways of advertising that are aimed to exploit the public and which are not always true in content. This presents a real problem in the purchasing of foods and it sometimes takes real experience before one is able to judge the value of similar products. There are always attempts to imitate or to create food products which are to replace others, similar in taste or appearance. This is true of dairy products as well as other foods. These substitutes or imitations offered for products at a lower price are usually inferior in food value and this explains the difference in price. Dairy products in Oregon are priced low in comparison to market reports from other cities and the quality is high. There is little wisdom, therefore, in the housewife being misled by stray wifely fanciful claims for imitation products which use, as their main selling argument, that they look like a dairy product, taste like a dairy product or can be used in place of a dairy product. Such statements are admissions that the new 'bargain' is only an imitation, all effort in the manufacture of which has been directed in producing a product which will be attractive to the taste and eye and which will sell for a profit to the manufacturer. Little thought has been given to the food value, the health giving properties, or the real economy of such a product. These imitations enjoy a short popularity and then suddenly disappear when the consumer learns that what seemed a low priced product is in reality a most expensive selection. Oregon dairymen produce a high quality ice cream containing from 12 to 16 percent butterfat. Ice cream of this standard is a real food. Food scientists recommend the liberal use of ice cream in the diet but in doing so have in mind real food product and not a substitute for it. In Oregon, too, we have branded butter. Grade A, as its name implies, is the top quality, made from the finest cream and manufactured with every care and equipment to produce a delicious grade of butter. Grade B butter is that of only slightly less pleasing quality or flavor and much superior to that sold as top grade in other states. Butter of lower grade than B is not recommended for home consumption. Despite various claims—there has never been a real substitute produced for butter or in fact for any real dairy product. It is well to remember then, in selecting dairy products, that the best is always the most economical and that a cheap imitation results in an expensive product when quality and food value is considered.
