Regulation Favored

"Why should the American Farmers not raise less wheat when the consumers have persistently and regularly paid more money for less wheat?"

This question is asked by E. L. Potter, head of the division of agricultural economics at O. S. C. in the course of a discussion of some of the basic principles and current fallacies heard in connection with the agricultural adjustment act.

Professor Potter pointed out that every adjustment or reduction program put into effect had to run the gauntlet of a three fold test as to whether a change in supply would materially affect the price, whether the reduction would still leave as much or more of a commodity than has been used regularly in the past, and finally whether the physical needs of the people require more of the commodity regardless of price.

Concerning wheat, Potter explained that small supplies have consistently brought greater total returns to producers than large crops; that America will use approximately so much wheat for human food, seed and feed regardless of price, and that dieticians are agreed that no good would come from trying to force materially greater consumption of wheat in the diet.

Somewhat similar conditions exist with every commodity which has come under a reduction or adjustment program, says Potter, while dairy products, use of which responds quickly to a lower price and more of which would benefit the average diet, have not been subjected to a reduction program. In the main, he said, adjustments have merely taken up the slack caused by lost export markets.

"A lot of rather misleading statements have been made in connection with the processing tax and with benefit payments," Potter added. "It has been said that the government is merely paying the farmer for not growing wheat, paying them substantial sums for doing nothing."

"The fact is the government is not paying the farmer out of its own funds at all but is merely paying the farmer what the government took away from the farmer at the time the wheat was sold—There has been a great deal of rather fruitless argument as to who actually pays the processing tax—the producer, the dealer or the ultimate consumer. There is no magic in the processing tax. It is merely a mechanism to penalize the non-cooperator or protect the cooperator."

Erosion Control May Save Northwest

"The farmers living within the Northwest Soil Erosion Project are unusually fortunate because they enjoy the benefits of complete cooperation between the Soil Erosion Service and the AAA," stated A. L. Hafenrichter, Chief Agronomist with the Soil Erosion Service, before a large gathering of farmers attending the Kiwanis Club luncheon at the Washington Hotel Thursday. Cooperation between the two governmental services benefit the farmer directly by permitting him to exchange unprofitable eroded land for average acres on an equal production basis, remove them from cultivation and seed them to permanent grass-legume mixtures. This plant cover will aid in erosion control and in restoring the soil fertility of these ridges. At the same time the arrangement will give the farmer a source of income as pasture or hay.

The agronomist pointed out that, although the Palouse region is just beginning to erode seriously, a grave condition exists here. The actual expense of erosion to the

A wise resolution for any housewife to make is to serve eggs in some form every day. Now that spring is coming and eggs are getting more plentiful, and cheaper in price, this can be done without increasing costs. Nutrition authorities recommend eggs at least three or four times a week for a well balanced diet. This is because of their value as body building food, their high vitamin content, and because they are an excellent source of iron in a form very easily utilized in the body. Because of this iron, eggs are good blood builders. Although eggs are richer in iron than milk, they contain much less calcium or lime. For this reason they are in no way a substitute for milk but should be considered a supplement to it. Dishes prepared with these two demonstrated by the fact that farmer in machinery alone was gullies have cut the life of combines one-fifth, according to figures obtained on 107 farms in this area. A recent survey showed an average of about one mile of gullies for every section of land in the district.

There are two fundamental concepts of paramount importance. Doctor Hafenrichter indicated. First, when this land was originally plowed, erosion did not occur due to the ability of the roots to hold the soil; second, a plant cover must be kept on the land during the erosion period if the soil is to be saved.

Impressing his audience with the national importance of erosion control, the crop specialist pointed out that, according to T. H. Bennett, Director of the Soil Erosion Service, the United States now consists of essentially only forty five states, because land equal to the area of three states as large as Illinois, Connecticut and Massachusetts has been removed from cultivation.

Approximately a hundred business men and farmers heard the agronomist discuss the conditions and problems of erosion in this section.

protective foods in combination assure a highly nutritious, as well as palatable result. The addition of cheese to any egg dish gives a zest and flavor which adds to the palatability.

A few recipes featuring eggs, with milk and cheese, are:

Eggs and Noodles au Gratin
Four tablespoons of butter
Two tablespoons of flour
One and a half cups of milk
One teaspoon of salt
Three tablespoons of butter
Six eggs
Six slices of liver sausage
Bechamel sauce
One tablespoon of tomato puree
With a large cookie cutter cut the bread slices in rounds. Heat with butter in a frying pan and brown the bread on both sides to a golden brown. In the meantime have the eggs poaching. Place a thin slice of the sausage on each slice of bread and a poached egg on top of this. Serve at once with a hot bechamel sauce to which the tomato puree has been added. Garnish with a sprig of parsley. This is a delightful luncheon dish. Yield 6 servings.

Egg Roll With Cheese Sauce
Make your favorite baking powder biscuit dough making a tsp of cheese with shortening. Roll out a about one-fourth inch thickness and spread with the egg filling:
One cup milk
Three tablespoons butter
One-eighth teaspoon white pepper
Two cups of diced celery
Six hard cooked eggs
One-half cup of grated cheese
One package of noodles
Cook noodles in salted water until tender. Make white sauce of flour, milk and seasonings. Brown celery in butter. Put noodles, celery, sliced eggs and cheese in alternate layers into buttered baking dish. Pour white sauce over all. Sprinkle with grated cheese and paprika. Set in moderate oven until cheese melts and browns slightly.

Eggs A La Belle
Six slices of bread

Three tablespoons flour
One-half teaspoon salt
Four hard cooked eggs

Make a thick white sauce of the flour, milk, salt and butter. Add the chopped hard cooked eggs and when cool, spread on the biscuit dough jelly roll fashion and cut into half inch slices. Place slices cut side up in pan and bake in hot oven 15 minutes. Serve with cheese sauce or melted cheese.
