ty which has not yet reported, totaled $646,393. During December, the average cost to the state was $10.65 for each.

These figures, and many more on Oregon's old age pension plan are contained in an article in the January number of the Commonwealth Review, publication of the University of Oregon. Information from the survey also shows that for 1935 the 35 counties reported on have budgeted a total of $969,240 for pensions, or an increase of nearly 50 percent over 1934.

lation which would tax cattle and sheep for the benefit of the AAA fund, from which money is drawn for payment to corn and wheat growers. This proposed bill has been hurried off to all the Oregon County agents for local discussion and publicity. It is assumed that stock men will protest vigorously. The Agricultural Committee of the House, to which I have so often referred, has twenty five members, seventeen Democrats, seven Republicans and one Progressive. The South is well represented, but Mr. Pierce is the only member of the Committee from almost the entire territory west of the Missouri River. Western states which have no other representation on the Committee are the Dakotas, Montana, Idaho, Washington, California, Nevada, Wyoming, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma. This Committee considers all legislation which affects agriculture. It is apparent that the dairy interests are not as well represented as are the lands that produce cotton seed. It will be easier to bar the fats and oils from the South Seas, which are used for making oleo, than it will be to stop the production of cotton seed products.

Public lands in Oregon do not, of course, bear any of the tax load, and increase of federal holdings is serious for the tax-payers. The proposal to add nearly a million acres for game reserves for antelope, taking lands which could be used for grazing purposes; the extension of federal forest lands; the purchase of sub-marginal farming lands; and the creation of bird reserves from farm lands—all these plans add to the tax load of farmers. The Oregon Legislature was called upon for an enabling act which would permit the Federal Forest Service to buy private forest lands adjacent to federal forests. These purchases were made possible through the Weeks law in 1911, and the Clark-McNary law of 1924, which established a national Forest Reserve Commission to administer funds provided for purchase of private timber lands. This act also provided that lands could not be bought without the consent of the state. Purchases have been made in the East, but no lands have yet been bought in Oregon. No one knows how much may be spent, nor how many acres may be bought, now that it has been made possible in Oregon, but it will add to the federal holdings which are already over 60 percent of the total acreage of the state. The well-known Day map prepared in 1915, showed nearly 37,000,000 acres of public land in slightly over 61,000,000 acres composing the area of the state. All this public domain belongs to the federal government, with the exception of 541,000 acres of untaxed state school land. Realizing the seriousness of this situation, Congressmen Pierce and Senator Steiwer have introduced bills to reimburse counties for the taxes lost on lands acquired by the federal government, applying especially to Jefferson and Harney counties, but applicable to others.

Words are interesting, and they are being coined almost as rapidly by the New Deal as by science. Here in Congress, we are reminded of the growth of the language by the presence of Representative Maverick, whose grandfather in Texas put that word into the language because of his large holdings of unbranded cattle. Then, every day, there are speeches made and bills introduced which are "buncombe" and this term originated in Congress when a member from Buncombe County, North Carolina admitted that he was "talking only for Buncombe."

The history of public health effort as it has developed in Oregon during the last twenty-five years is reflected with achievement. Appropriations for public health have proved to be good investments and the citizens of Oregon have been saved many thousands of dollars by the prevention of unnecessary diseases. The cost of diseases is so much greater than the cost of prevention that it is poor economy. First of all, typhoid fever has been almost completely controlled in Oregon. It is but a short time ago that epidemics of this disease ravaged the country side and took a heavy toll even in our larger cities. As late as 1909 the death rate from this cause was 21 per 100,000. Excellent water systems have been installed, and as a result of better supervision and chlorination of supplies when necessary, the typhoid rate dropped in an amazing manner. In 1933 the death rate for typhoid fever in this state was 1.9 per 100,000 population.

In 1909 there were 990 cases of typhoid fever, the cost of which was estimated at about three hundred dollars a case, or a total cost of $297,000. Compare this with 1934, with 127 cases, at a total cost of $38,100. Prevention meant a saving of 123 lives and $258,900 annually. Estimating the value of a life at $5,000 the saving was increased by $615,000. Almost one million dollars are being saved annually by the excellent control of typhoid fever.

Successful results have likewise attended the campaign during the past 25 years to reduce infant mortality. By means of popular education and the services of public health nurses, health officials and other public health workers, the mortality of infants has been reduced to less than one-half what it used to be, so that the infant mortality rate is now under 4 per such a late date. No names have been heard as to his successor. But Hood's doom was sealed, according to all indications.

POSTAGE STAMP ILLUSTRATOR: When President Roosevelt and Postmaster General "Jim" Taftley sat down to choose the ten greatest American natural wonder pictures as illustrations for the national park series of postage stamps they selected the Great White Throne, towering master of Zion National Park, as one of them. Its gleaming white precipices defy venturesome climbers; its plateau-like top untrod by man. Zion National Park in southern Utah is a summer mecca for tourists from all over the world. STATEHOUSE GOSSIP

There are now 3 new candidates for insurance commissioner, which undoubtedly will be announced about April 1. William Graham of Portland, a member of the Legislature; Hugh Earle of Eugene and Ormand Lipscomb of Portland. If Democrats are all in the race, they wish to succeed Commissioner A. H. Averill.

Changes were also expected in the State Industrial Accident Commission, and rumors were that William Gosselin, nicknamed "Pinkey" because of the hue of his curly hair, would be transferred to another position after the session. Gosselin is now Secretary of the Governor, and as such a member of the state parole board.

The Legislature to date has cost the State $130,000, or figured down just about $2,400 a day which means approximately 12 cents a second for every second the Legislature is working in assembly. This figure sounds strong, but it is a fact. The cost was expected to run about $140,000, exceeding the long 60-day session of 1933 by $10,000. And yet it was alleged the new group would operate more economically.

After the members go home and calmly survey what has been accomplished, they will have little to satisfy them. The accomplishment to date has been virtually nil, and a review would take little space to record. Relief has been handled, but this could almost have been handled in a couple of days.

In the meantime the solons are weary, their nerves are becoming frayed, and they have been payless since February 22, and the end of the 40 days. And this week the session will be long and tiresome, with probably night sessions in addition. And supporters and opponents of bills will be on edge, because things are killed or pushed through very rapidly and sometimes unexpectedly the last few days.

borhood of 3500 cases were adjusted in one way or another. As an average case generally involved about five creditors, it is probable that around 17,500 debts were adjusted with a total scale down estimated in excess of $2,500,000.

Besides the chairman and secretary, the state officers included E. A. McCormack of Eugene as vice-chairman, and six district chairmen. Heading the work in this district is Glenn B. Marsh, Hood River, while the county committee consists of D. E. Stephens and H. B. Pinkerton, Moro; C. A. Tom, Rufus; Luther Davis, Kent; and Judge Fred Krusow, Grass Valley.

This work is still going on and these committeemen are ready to assist at any time in working out practical settlements which will avoid action or possible foreclosure.
