Warm summer days and one begins to look for more cooling types of food. Of course, summer or winter, the body requires the same food elements to nourish it, but it is possible to plan well balanced meals from the foods naturally available over the summer months.

Fresh fruits and vegetables in salads, cheese and eggs to take the place of meat, cold milk to drink, bread and butter, too, of course, ice cream for dessert, and you have included all of the protective foods, and without having to toil over a hot stove preparing the heavier type of meal.

Ice cream is the perfect dessert, because it not only is cold and appealing in appearance, but is packed with practical food value. Made from milk and cream it has practically the same value as a food and can be looked upon as another way of putting milk in the diet.

The adaptability of ice cream to any type of meal is most important to the homemaker right now. It can be used as a climax for a special dinner or to meet an emergency when the unexpected guest arrives, and with ease in any case, for it is always available at the confectionery or drug store in a variety of flavors to suit any occasion.

Many interesting things can be done with ice cream, too. Sundaes made with fresh fruit, enticing milk shakes are familiar favorites to everyone, but there are still others not so familiar perhaps, but just as interesting and easy to prepare.
