Crop Report of Northwest Shows More Acreage In Greater Acreage for 1936

Wheat Crop Presages Largest Crop Since Druth

The Pacific Northwest States, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and also including Montana, seeded 3,677,000 acres of winter wheat in the fall of 1935 compared with 3,722,000 acres, the average of fall seedings for the five years 1927 to 1931, according to estimates of the Department of Agriculture released today by C. J. Borum, Agricultural Statistician for Washington and Oregon.

These four states show an increase of 243,000 or about 7 per cent over the 3,434,000 acres seeded last fall. This increase over last fall in plantings of winter wheat in this area will probably be compensated by a decrease in spring wheat planted next year. Comparing these states separately with winter wheat acreage planted last fall; Washington the only important winter wheat state in the whole United States that shows a decrease, dropped 153,000 to 1,121,000; Oregon increased 113,000 acres to 869,000; Idaho increased 28,000 acres to 583,000; and Montana, responsible for most of the increase in the four northwest states, increased 255,000 acres to 1,104,000 acres.

Condition of winter wheat on December 1 was far below average in each of these four states and for the group as a whole condition was 64.4 per cent of normal com-

HI-WAYS TO HEALTH

by ADA R. MAYNE

OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

One problem that confronts us as we approach the coming of the New Year is the eternal problem of feeding a hungry family three times a day every single day of the year—and such a vital problem surely deserves at least a few minutes serious consideration. No matter how the housewife may feel—no matter how busy she may be—the family must eat. And if they are to be at all well and happy they must eat adequately and regularly.

If you decide to make a new Year's resolution it could very well be this. To see that my family, especially the children, get plenty of the essential foods every day. The first on the list of essential foods, of course, will be milk. Milk is a body builder and any reasonable person knows that growing active children need plenty of body building material. Milk supplies more of the food essentials than any other food—it is said to be the most nearly perfect food one can find.

In the first place one quart of milk supplies to the body two-thirds of the daily requirements of this body building material called protein. It furnishes all the calcium required by the body, and if mother feeds her family Vitamin D milk, the calcium is more readily and completely utilized by the body. Calcium makes for adequate bone structure. In the first place it is important that expectant mothers drink at least one quart of milk each day to insure a ped-fect formed child at birth. Some doctors even supplement the amount of calcium found in the milk by encouraging the use of calcium tablets in addition—that's how important calcium is. And as the child grows he must have it for the bones of the body and the development of good sound teeth. And in addition milk supplies important vitamins also necessary for growth and for keeping the body in good health.

Besides milk we should resolve to include two vegetables and two fruits each day, and egg, meat or fish. There never seems to be much trouble in including breakfast foods and bread in the family diet, also sweets in one form or another, so we need not think too much about them. Milk, fruits, vegetables and eggs are the important foods to consider in this New Year's resolution, because they are the foods that are rich in the minerals and vitamins that promote growth and increase resistance to disease. Of course, it does take a little time to plan ahead and every day see that these essentials are included in the family diet, but think of the time, worry and expense ultimately saved—a family of sturdy children comparatively free from colds and the fatigue which is so typical of individuals who are improperly fed.

So let one New Year's resolution be to see that each child in your family shall consume in some manner one quart of milk each day during the coming year, and each adult one pint; and in addition to this, an abundance of fruits, vegetables and eggs.

pared with 66.0 on December, last year and the ten-year average (1923-32) of 83.5 per cent. Dry soil conditions and freezing weather have seriously retarded growth of the plants and it may be necessary to reseed considerable of the acreage next spring.

Acreage Up

For the entire United States the acreage of winter wheat sown in the fall of 1935 for harvest is estimated at 47,530,000 acres. This is 6.7 per cent above the 1934 fall sown acreage of 44,530,000 acres and 5.7 per cent more than the 5-year (1927-1931) average of 44,969,000 acres. Heavily increased seedings are estimated in the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, Montana and Colorado.

The condition of winter wheat on December 1 was reported at 78.2 per cent of normal compared with 77.8 per cent on the same date a year ago and the 10-year average (1923-1932) condition of 82.4.

Wheat Condition good in U. S.

Conditions have been favorable for fall growth in the states east of the Mississippi river. With the exception of the area in eastern Kansas and Nebraska, most of important winter wheat territory west of the Mississippi river was seeded under dry soil conditions. The outlook in the dry areas has been somewhat improved by late fall rains. The condition of the crop on December 1 indicates that abandonment during the winter will be somewhat above average. Abandonment of 1934 seeded acreage was 30.4 per cent compared with 21.3 per cent of the 1933 seedings and the average for the ten years (1922-1931) of 12.6 per cent.

Based on past relationships, an abandonment from 1935 seedings of between 15 and 20 per cent is indicated. A yield per acre below average is also indicated by the condition. Past relationships of December 1 condition to yield and corollary weather studies indicate a crop for harvest in 1936 of about 530,000,000 bushels compared with 433,447,000 bushels in 1935 and the 5-year (1923-1932) average of 618,186,000 bushels.
