"NO STUDYING ALLOWED"

There will be no studying of textbooks, reference books and theses in this room. The picture is a production of the "browsing room"—an interesting part of the new library at the University of Oregon, which is fast rising from what once was termed Kincaid field.

"No studying allowed in this room."

This sign, or one similarly worded, will appear over the door of the most conspicuous and important room in the new University of Oregon library, now under construction and expected to be ready for occupancy next fall. The room, which will be comfortably furnished by friends of the library, will be for pleasure reading only, and the atmosphere and furniture have been planned to conform to this idea. It has tentatively been called the "browsing room," and will be open to all students. In place of the usual rows of desks, it will have easy chairs, daybeds, attractive floor lamps, and at each end a fireplace, which in cool winter days will hold a cheery fire, will add a home-like touch.

Books to Line Walls

Walls will be lined with books, most of which will be gifts, all in shelves conveniently placed for easy inspection. An attendant will be on hand, not to enforce quiet and discipline, but to offer friendly advice and to charge out volumes the students may wish to take out overnight.

The plans for the structure have placed the browsing room on the main floor, in the space between the two principal entrances. It is to be a room 25 by 90 feet, with a north exposure that will provide ample daylight. Partial walls will divide the room into three sections. Wide doors, each of glass so that students passing by will look into the inviting spot, will be provided at each end.

Used to Beguile

"The room is not to be a retreat for accomplished book-lovers, but a means of beguilement for non-reading students," explains Karl W. Othman, dean of personnel of the university and a member of the committee that worked out the idea for the project.

"It is to be free from all odor of requirement and to be baited by the choicest lures of the book trade. Once a student is 'hooked' we hope he will remain a 'victim' of good reading and good books for the rest of his life. Such a service, as we feel, as important for a university library to render as handing out required readings to book-bored credit-hunters."

The room will be furnished largely by funds to be raised by a group known as "friends of the University Library," and from gifts already available for this purpose.

The library, which will cost approximately $460,000 when completed, has been made possible by a PWA grant and loan to the university. Work on it has been under way since last summer, and it is expected to be ready for occupancy next fall. It will contain the full stories and a basement, and the modern and up-to-date in every

Agnes Simon Wins Mermaid Tavern Award

By Janet Wilcox

At a special high school assembly held Monday of this week, Emma Ellen Fortner as president of the Mermaid Tavern presented the gold pin awarded by that organization for the best written theme composed by a sophomore. The purpose of the award is to encourage the art of correct and intelligent composition. Agnes Simon was the recipient of the much coveted award. This contest will be an annual event to be sponsored by the Mermaid Tavern. This year each sophomore wrote a long theme of more than 1000 words on the subject of "Digestion." Miss Hope Inlow, head of the English department of the Baker high school acted as judge and complimented the class as a whole on their excellent work in this field.

This Friday evening, February 14, the boy's basketball team will meet the Kent aggregation on the local floor.

Grass Valley and Rufus Matched

On Wednesday, February 19, Grass Valley plays its crucial game with Rufus. At the present time, both of the local high school aggregations have a clear slate with no defeats in the county. Whether Grass Valley is to capture the title in both boys' and girls' basketball will probably be determined that night. A record crowd is expected as the rivalry between the two schools is very keen, and a meeting of the two schools always means an evening packed to the rim with excitement.

The Civics Class will hold a debate Thursday morning on the question "Resolved; That the jury system in our courts should be abolished." Phyllis Dickson, Ferdinand Stark, and James Blagg will uphold the affirmative while Vere Pike, Clarence Young and Eddie Peters will fight it out on the negative side.

School Movies Shown

The students of the high school and of the grades will have another opportunity to view movies at school this Friday if they bring a dime.

Phyllis Dickson returned to school again this week after having been absent during the past week.

The Mermaid Tavern met at the home of Emma Ellen Fortner, its president, Tuesday evening. Reports were given by various ones of the members with a leaning towards the novel, following with the usual refreshments of tea, olives and sandwiches were served.

County Warrants Spurned By Treasurer

Millions in idle funds drawing no interest but not one cent to invest in county warrants. That was the answer to the state bond commission to the request of Elmer Gandy, state relief administrator, or that state funds be used in taking up county warrants in order to eliminate discounts on relief warrants. Governor Martin and T. Morris Dunne, member of the accident commission, both opposed the proposal which had the approval of State Treasurer Holman.

A benefit dance is to be given for the local troop on Washington's birthday and arrangements have already been made for an orchestra from Dufur.

100,303 Cars Visit Oregon In 1935

Motorists From Far Countries Visit Oregon During Year

Approximately 300,000 visitors followed the highways into Oregon during 1935, as registrations of nonresident motor vehicles totaled 100,303 for the year, reports Earl Snell, secretary of state. Averaging three persons to the car, this estimate of the number who motorized into the state has been made by those who follow traffic trends.

The increase of registration of out of state automobiles over the preceding year amounted to 8,085, which would indicate that nearly 25,000 additional persons came into the state during 1935. The 1934 total was 92,286. Increases in the number of cars checked were noted each month, except in March, April, May and October. December registrations advanced from 3,096 in 1934 to 3,420 in 1935.

California as usual, led among the visitors, with 53,450 motor vehicles checked during the twelve months, better than 50 percent of the total registrations. Washington was second with 17,564, and Idaho third with 3,521, while Canadian registrations totaled 2,797. Every state in the union was represented, and Delaware and Vermont, with 14 cars each, were last in the tabulation of state totals.

Distant places represented among the tourists were the Philippines, England, India, South America and the Dutch West Indies.

Old Legal Papers Tell Beginning Of Grass Valley

Old papers found by deputy county clerk Viola Hansen while clearing shelves for the WPA paint crew tell of the incorporation of the city of Grass Valley back in 1900.

Hollis Wilcox made affidavit, September 10 of that year that in the absence of James Hays, Emmitt Olds and M. F. S. Henton, the regular election judges, J. W. Cole, James Dennis and Hollis Wilcox were appointed and that C. M. Rollins and O. P. King were clerks.

The county court, Judge Fulton, R. P. Orr and R. H. King, had set the election date in the July meeting on receipt of a petition from J. H. S. Smith and 44 other legal voters of the proposed town. Legal proceedings were published in the Grass Valley Journal, W. I. Westerfield, editor and publisher. Alexander Scott and Elizabeth

Scott made affidavit that they would abandon the streets in the townsite of Sherman which was the official title of the south end of town which was sometimes called Scottown because Scott's store and warehouse was located there.

Too Many Curves
This country watched England build the first steam railways and there was a question among many whether the locomotive, successful on Britain's usually straight roads, would be equally successful here where we would have to have so many curves.
