USES FOR BONNEVILLE POWER

A recent report by the state planning board to the governor discusses possible uses of Bonneville power from several angles. First recommendation is for a complete survey of the mineral resources of the state in order to determine the mineral wealth of the state and eventually prepare for its use.

It is assumed that there will be enough power developed at Bonneville when the dam is finished that low grade ores can be reduced at a sufficiently low cost to pay for the operation and the mining and transportation of the ores. For many years we have heard of the low grade ores in eastern Oregon. In Wheeler county there are whole hillsides of aluminum ore just under the percentage of aluminum that can be reduced at a profit by any known system. It may be that if the cost of electric energy was made low enough this could be used at Bonneville.

There are other ores in other counties that may be made valuable by this cheap electricity. If so there will be a demand for labor and for transportation facilities that will increase our population many times before the half way point of the century.

It is this sort of development that will be of aid to the agricultural parts of the state for a larger population will require larger supplies of food, of clothing and other materials that are grown on Oregon farms.

The further development of the upper Columbia river will naturally follow a demand for transportation facilities from eastern Oregon and Washington mines to Bonneville. With aid from this source the farmers should be able to move their crops to market much more cheaply than at present. With a better market close at hand and with cheaper means of moving products to market and with broadened demand that will encourage diversification of crops the Oregon farmer, especially along the Columbia may look forward with confidence to his future.

THIS LOOKS LIKE SPRING

Something finally happened the thumb the weather man was using to hold plants in the ground and overcoat on all who were outside the houses. It had to happen sometime but it did seem to be unduly delayed this season. Wheat has been trying to start for six weeks and gardeners were anxious to put seeds into the ground for a long time and both were afraid of frosty nights and chilly days.

Now the sun shines and the wheat plants, encouraged, are already covering the ground and the country looks like spring all in a few days. Farmers who said we never would have a crop now feel that we will raise a good one, if there is always that if, of course.

Farmers like to raise things, plants and animals; they want to see them grow, to have their work rewarded. That is the main thing. With a little co-operation from the maker of the weather the farmers of this county usually do a very good job also.

A few years ago, before the depression came along to make them pay attention to their businesses, store keepers in small towns used to play marbles and store keepers in larger towns used to play golf at this time of year. It was hard to find one of them, so busy were they with their physical exercise and so interested in keeping fit. Now there is less golf and almost no marbles, more work and the health seems to be just as good as ever.

Apparently the world has accepted as a fact the Italian conquest of Ethiopia as the pretexts are fewer. It may be that it is alright for one country to steal from another as long as it gets by with it.

The county historical contest has closed for the year and soon we will have a group of essays on historical subjects that will instruct the young in local history and recall for the old the days of yore.

The last time Smedley Butler came to Oregon he came to start the state police system and he talked. Now he comes to talk and we wonder what he will do while here.

In spring a young man's fancy is supposed to turn to love, but base ball and fishing usually get some attention when the gun comes out.

It is undoubtedly going to be a good move if the people of Oregon can formulate a program on Bonneville power that will be generally satisfactory. Otherwise development may be delayed through bickering.

April is surely a peculiar month. It started here with a record for cold and now verges on a record for heat.

At least the Townsendites can feel somewhat akin to Morgan since both have been investigated by congress.

In Other Days

From the Observer April 13, 1907
Mr. and Mrs. George Hennagin returned from their sad mission Sunday, the burial of her mother. Mrs. Fuller, at Underwood, Wn. Death occurred on the 11th, at the age of 64 years.

partment of agriculture. Oregon republicans do not propose to let the democrats get away with any political plums without a fight, according to Lowell C. Paget, president of the Oregon republican clubs. In districts in which no republican candidates filed the voters will be urged to write in names. One senatorial district—Douglas county—and six legislative seats failed to attract republican aspirants.

Overpayments totalling more than $3600 to state aided institutions have been revealed in an audit just completed by the state department, according to Wallace S. Warton, executive secretary to Governor Martin. Wharton charged that money contributed by relatives toward the support of institutional wards had not been properly credited against the state's contribution. More than 50 percent of the alleged overpayment was laid at the feet of the court of domestic relations for Multnomah county.

Members of the state board of medical examiners found little sympathy at the hands of the board of control when they appealed from a ruling of the budget department reducing their per diem pay from $10 to $6 a day. State Treasurer Holman and Secretary of State Snell refused to interfere in the controversy, pointing out that the board members were appointees of the governor as also is the budget director. Governor Martin declared that if the medical examiners did not want to work for $6 a day there were plenty of medical men who would be glad of appointment to the board.

Requirements for admission to the Oregon bar were increased by the supreme court this week. Here after applicants for a law diploma must have graduated from a three year course in a recognized law school and have taken two years of pre-law or general college work. The new requirement will not become effective until August 1, 1941 giving those now taking law courses plenty of time to get in under the wire.

More than 200 architects will present plans for the new Oregon capitol building according to Alton John Bassett, secretary to the capitol reconstruction commission. Plans entered in the competition which will determine the capitol architect must be filed with Arthur S. Benson, clerk of the state supreme court by May 22. Judging of the entries will be completed by May 28.

Substantial business increases are reported by power utilities operating in Oregon according to Frank C. McColloch, public utilities commissioner. Mountain States Power company, operating in the Willamette valley reported 19-35 income $40,179 over that of 1934.

an increase of 15 percent. The company's Coos Bay division reported a 40 percent net increase amounting to $60,290.60. Pacific Light & Power company reported an increase of 24 percent on its Oregon operations.

State employees who are in arrears in their principal and interest payments on loans from the World War Veterans State Aid are to be called onto the carpet and advised to keep their credit good. Governor has instructed Jerrold Owen, secretary of the bonus commission to prepare a list of all state employees who have failed to meet their obligations promptly. The department is moving in on borrowers who are in position to meet loan payments but do not do so.

The practice of releasing prisoners at the state penitentiary upon expiration of the sentence minus good time credits, without a parole from the governor was without authority in law Attorney General Van Winkle advised Warden James W. Lewis last week. The practice has gone unquestioned for 14 years until it was raised in the case of Earl H. Fehl, former Jackson county resident, whose release was protested by a number of his former townsmen.
