FARM CONDITIONS WILL BE GOOD IN 1937

A prospective increase in consumer purchasing power and a some what corresponding increase in farm production are the two most significant forecasts made at the National Agricultural Outlook conferences held recently in Washington, D. C., reports L. R. Breithaupt, extension economist at Oregon State College, who represented Oregon at this meeting.

A voluminous report on the outlook for all major crops and animal products was compiled from the national viewpoint. Copies of this are in the hands of all county agents who will be glad to go over any part of it with those interested.

Mr. Breithaupt is now engaged in localizing parts of the national report to Oregon conditions. His conclusions will be issued by the college from time to time in the form of regular agricultural situation and outlook reports.

The first of these for the new crop year will deal with horticultural crops, plans for which are usually made in the winter. The importance of the prospective rise in purchasing power is shown by the fact that the Oregon farm price index has shown an almost exact correlation with the national industrial payroll index.

For example, the average farm price index in Oregon for the five depression years was 57.4 per cent of the 1926-1930 period. In the same year the average United States factory payroll index was 58.4 per cent or just one point difference.

If the consumer's purchasing power increases 10 per cent for 1937 as is now predicted and if a larger acreage of crops with a higher average yield is realized as is also predicted, national farm prices may be expected to average about the same as in 1926.

Even if farm prices merely remain at the 1936 level, total farm income will be somewhat greater for the country as a whole, Breithaupt points out. A part of this extra income will doubtless be needed to meet higher farm costs which are now in prospect, but undoubtedly part of it will be used in improving farm homes and family life.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Decker returned to their home here Monday having spent the past two weeks visiting relatives in Wendover, Utah.
