

Wasco Lodge Holds Installation Of Officers

Marion 127 held its installation of lodge officers Wednesday night. The ceremonies inducted into office Harry Richelderfer, noble grand; Selma Watkins, vice grand; Mae Yocum, secretary; June Spencer, treasurer; Sarah Addington, ward; Sam Brock, conductor; Eliza Dingle, chaplain; Roy Belshee, inside guard; Charles Sisco, outside guard; Mabel McPherson, R. S. V. G.; Wilma Wilde, L. S. V. G.; Lena Brock, R. S. N. G.

Charter members' night was held by the Wasco Eastern Star lodge Tuesday. It was spent in observing the birthday of the organization.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Alley were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon I. Miller of Moro, Sunday. Members of the American Legion auxiliary met Wednesday at the Legion hall for their regular meeting.

Oliver and John Robinson were hosts at a pinocle card party Friday night with three tables in play. Mrs. W. A. Clothier and W. B. Guy received high honors.

Dinner guests at the Andy Shear home Sunday included: Mrs. Ella Hyslop, Mrs. Guy Pound and Marshall, Miss Marie Slusher and Hollis Hull all of The Dalles, and Mrs. Adeline Hull of Wasco.

Mrs. Jessie Amos has returned to Wasco after a three months visit in Portland with her sister. Before returning home she spent a few days with relatives in The Dalles.

Miss Evelyn Scott was in Portland over the week-end.

Cecil Fields was a business visitor in Grass Valley, Thursday.

Mrs. Jennie Young spent a week at the home of Mrs. Eliza Dingle and attended the evangelistic services at the Christian church.

W. E. Stram, visiting evangelist was called to his home in Salem, Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Watkins and children spent Saturday and Sunday at Camus, Washington, where they visited Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth McCafferty. When they stopped in Stevenson they were informed that Mr. and Mrs. Myron Halse are in Portland where he is attending a tractor school.

Wayne Darby of Culver visited his mother, Mrs. Lydia Darby, Sunday, who is in The Dalles hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Walsh are working on the Art Smith farm. Mrs. Fred Fortner left for Forest Grove, Monday, where she will visit her daughter, Winifred, who is attending Pacific university.

Mrs. August Huckin and Mrs.

Belle Clothier motored to Portland Saturday to meet Mrs. Tom Wiggins of South Dakota, a friend of Mrs. Huckin.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Blackwood have returned to Wasco after several years absence.

Friends of Mrs. Roy Atwood are pleased to hear of her return home after spending three months in The Dalles.

Mrs. Worth Tate has been visiting Mrs. Elizabeth Fuller.

Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Sargent, Mrs. W. J. Douglas and Mrs. Wm. McKinney spent the week end in Salem.

Miss Christine Huckin is employed at the telephone office as relief operator.

Rev. W. H. Douglas has been re-decorating the interior of the M. E. church. At the morning service last Sunday, Katherine Fridley and Jack Hines played selections on the trumpet and cornet.

Phil Yates is in Portland with his brother in law Pat O'Meara. Mr. O'Meara underwent an operation in a hospital there Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Brock and Vergil and Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Yocum spent Sunday at Mosier visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Yocum.

Wm. Reid has returned to Wasco where he will assist his father in business. Mrs. Wm. Reid has been spending three weeks in Portland with her aunt.

Mrs. Charles Everett accompanied Mr. Reid to Portland last week.

Wasco citizens in The Dalles last Saturday included, Mrs. Ormand Hilderbrand, Mrs. Helen Dingle, Harry Barzee, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Fridley, Mrs. Everett Watkins, Mrs. Grace Hartman, Mrs. Andy Shearer, Mr. and Mrs. Robt.

McPherson, and Mrs. Curt Tom.

Wasco Methodist Episcopal Church Willis J. Douglas Jr., Pastor. Sunday School 10:00 a. m. Morning Worship 11:00 a. m.

Topic for Morning Worship will be, "Are Ye Able?" The scriptural material is found in the 20th chapter of Matt. gospel.

The time for services at Grass Valley is changed from evening to 2:30 in the afternoon. Tell everyone and plan to make this a rousing meeting.

The Wasco high school young people will hold a St. Patrick day party at the parsonage, Wednesday, March 17.

Bishop Titus Lowe will preach at the Methodist church in The Dalles Palm Sunday evening. We urge everyone to attend.

AIR MAIL (Continued from page two) present domestic air-mail system, which is so designated that it serves the entire United States, and that by means of train and star route connections, every section is served.

Attention is also called to the fact that many patrons do not know that air-mail is transported over night from coast to coast in regular routine with a total of ten trips daily which operate regularly in the 24 hour period from various points on the Pacific coast to points on the Atlantic coast.

North and South routes connect these trans-continental routes and are so interspersed that the service reaches into every part of the States. Practically one half of the mail schedules are flown at night through the use of lighted airways and radio beams.

The United States foreign air-mail now gives service to Central and South America and the West Indies, to Hawaii, Guam, and the Philippine Islands; it will soon be extended to China, where connections will be made to all countries in the Orient.

Both domestic and foreign air-mail may be registered. Insured and C. O. D. parcels may also be sent by domestic air-mail.

It is the desire of the Post Office Department that every American be fully cognizant of the splendid service which the Department has provided for its patrons. Full information on schedules, both for mailing and arrival will be cheerfully furnished by your postmaster.

Next in line on the athletic program is ball—whether baseball or softball. It has not been definitely determined. Initiating teams toward softball, though the matter will be settled by the consideration of the opinions of all the county schools in order to provide competition.

The appreciation of spring in Rufus is indeed deep and compassionate. Spring tendencies raise their tanned heads and make themselves known—for instance: the horse shoes have been dug from under the deer, stoop; the young folks are seen strolling—presumably picking "yellow bells" (or, quoting poetry), and to return to less tangible things, spring plowing and other forms of farm activities are getting under way.

Another indication of spring—the students of the school begin a new six weeks period this week exactly as if they realized that high grades weren't necessary any longer. H-m-m. Spring fever already.

Rufus Notes

The primary kiddies of Rufus had a little diversion a week ago last Monday. Miss Murdock, the primary teacher, finding that several of her youngsters had never ridden on a train, took her class to Biggs and put them aboard the mid-day train and allowed them to ride to Rufus. The parents gave their permission for them to do so.

Based on a story by AND THE PARAMOUNT PICTURE OF THE SAME NAME

As far as the Rose Bowl is concerned, here's the setup, the coach continued softly. "If we take Erie and we're going to try—we're one of four teams eligible. One of 'em will high hat it, a couple have rules against it."

"Then that makes us the logical choice?" asked Hay. "It's not that easy. Unfortunately, we're not a big, well-known college. The public likes color in the game. But—we can get the Rose Bowl, gentlemen, if we sell the country on the idea it wants to see us there."

I suggest that we get our publicity department busy at once."

Shortly after the directors' meeting had concluded Paddy was walking across the campus, reading a letter he had just received.

"Dear Mr. O'Riley": (It read) Here's the photograph you asked for. Knowing August as I do, I can hardly believe he was too bashful to write for himself. At any rate, they tell

CHAPTER VI GENTLEMEN—We have called this special meeting of the Board of Regents of Green Ridge college to discuss a very important matter regarding athletics. William Hay, president of the board of directors, began pompously. "Coach Moreland has given us a winning team this year—so far."

"We've been lucky," Scapy spoke up deprecatingly, although he had smiled at the "so far." "Might not happen again for ten years in a small college like this."

"Now, I think it all boils down to this," Hay continued, looking at the sober faces which lined the director's table. "If our team defeats Erie we're in line for an invitation to the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena. Sierra will probably represent the West. Are you for it, gentlemen?"

"I'm against it," growled Henry Wallace, a lean and hungry individual at the far end of the table. "It gives Green Ridge the wrong kind of advertising. It places emphasis on the wrong thing. Green Ridge is an institution of learning—not a training school for athletes."

"But a winning football team builds enrollment!"

"And college football has no equal in moulding men," interposed another member of the board.

"What have you to say, Coach?" Hay appealed.

"Well," Soapy rose and picked his words carefully. "As far as football being a moulder of men, or college either, for that matter, I think that's a lot of malarkey." As the directors started and frowned he continued imperturbably. "I think kids get a few pointers from their folks when they're young. When we get 'em they're either made or spoiled—we just add a few trimmings to the job. But I'll tell you what I think a football team does do—it gives a man something to yell for—something to be proud of when it's good—something to try to fix when it's bad—and something to come back to when he's old. Anybody needs that."

He looked down the table. With the exception of Wallace, the directors nodded agreement.

T. Lester Johnson
LAWYER
WASCO OREGON

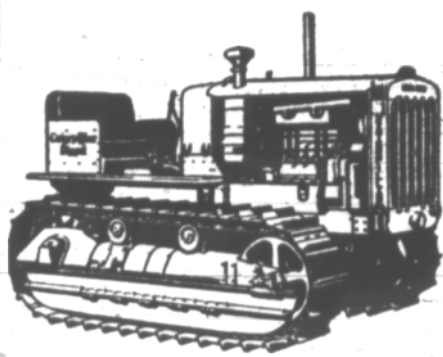

When Your Shoes need repair send them to
WERNMARK'S
GOOD SHOE REPAIRING
204 Second St. : THE DALLES

See us for Sodium Chlorate and Atlacide
V.C. Family and Princess Flour
Mill Feeds Grain Bags
Dairy and Poultry Feeds Twine
Rolled Grains Concentrates
Flour Salt
All kinds of Insurance

Sherman Cooperative Grain
Growers : : : Wasco, Oregon
Safety Deposit Boxes for Lease

WASCOMARKET
RED & WHITE STORE
Groceries—Meats—Fresh
Fruits and Vegetables in Season
Your Patronage Appreciated

$75 for repairs in 12 years

Here's proof of Quality

Battleground, Wash. Gentlemen: About twelve years ago we purchased a "Caterpillar" tractor and it has been in use on our place ever since. The total repair cost has been under $75.00 and the track pins and bushings have never been turned. The track rails are in excellent shape, very little wear being noticeable. No telling how many hours the machine has covered but it is always ready to go and has done our work with complete satisfaction. Although it is an old tractor now, it probably will be doing our work many years hence.

Yours very truly,
W. C. Johnson.

What could be more convincing than statements like the above from people who have had years of experience with "Caterpillars." They perform more economically, are more dependable and last longer than other makes of tractors because every detail of design and construction is based upon actual field needs.

O'MEARA
SUPPLY CO.

"WASH WATER WHEEZES"

are so old-fashioned!

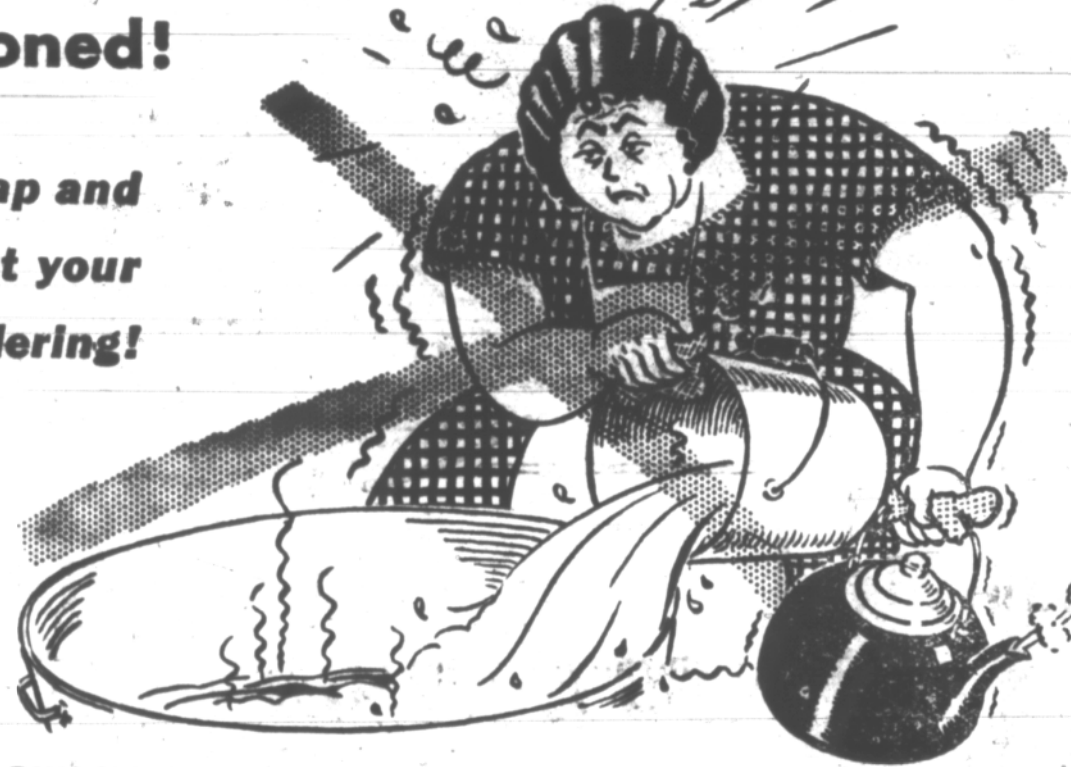

...Electricity is so cheap and willing... Use it to heat your water and do your laundering!

Is hot water a serious problem in your home? Does heating it mean firing up your range or furnace full tilt?

The way to have effortless, economical hot water is with an automatic electric water heater. Then on wash day—or any other time—all you have to do is to turn the faucet for as much hot water as you need.

In fact, the modern way to do all your laundering is to do it electrically. Then drudgery is banished. Your clothes are cleaner, more attractive and have not been subjected to "wash wear."

Start your all-electric home laundry now. Prices on electric washers, ironers and water heaters are still low although advances are expected. The operating cost of this equipment is small because Pacific Power & Light Company's rates—always low—are now lower than ever before!

BUY YOUR APPLIANCES NOW, BEFORE PRICES ADVANCE!

Electric Washer. The new washers are extremely gentle, yet so efficient that dirt is removed in 5 to 7 minutes. Prices are still low. Be thrifty. Buy now!

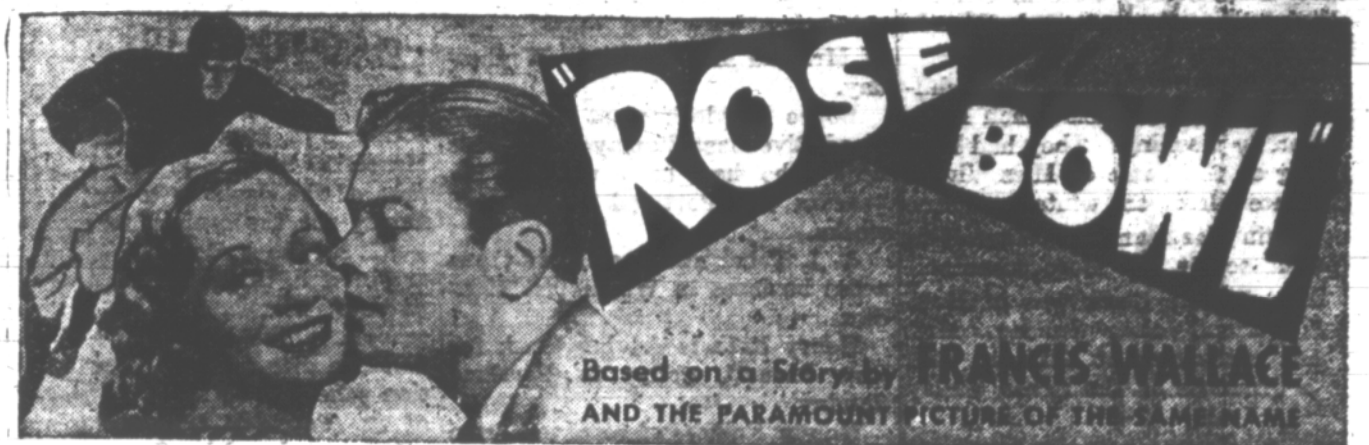

Electric Ironer. An ironer takes the backache out of ironing. It exerts all needed pressure, does all the lifting and pushing. You merely sit and feed your pieces through in half the time you formerly took to iron.

Electric Water Heater. With an automatic electric water heater, you have plentiful hot water for laundering and every household use whenever you turn a faucet, day or night, winter or summer. Heater and operating costs are low.

For electric washers, ironers and water heaters
SEE ANY DEALER IN ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT
or PACIFIC POWER & LIGHT COMPANY
Always at Your Service

See the New
THOR WASHERS AND IRONERS
AT PACIFIC POWER & LIGHT COMPANY
Always at your Service

New Thor "Gentle Hand"
Washers . . . $79.95 up
Other Thor models as low as $59.50
New Thor Ironers $44.95 up

Little did Dutch Schultz know that his old high school romance with Florence Taylor would be the means by which Green Ridge would be catapulted into national recognition as a Rose Bowl possibility.

"We've been lucky," Scapy spoke up deprecatingly, although he had smiled at the "so far." "Might not happen again for ten years in a small college like this."

"Now, I think it all boils down to this," Hay continued, looking at the sober faces which lined the director's table. "If our team defeats Erie we're in line for an invitation to the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena. Sierra will probably represent the West. Are you for it, gentlemen?"

"I'm against it," growled Henry Wallace, a lean and hungry individual at the far end of the table. "It gives Green Ridge the wrong kind of advertising. It places emphasis on the wrong thing. Green Ridge is an institution of learning—not a training school for athletes."

"But a winning football team builds enrollment!"

"And college football has no equal in moulding men," interposed another member of the board.

"What have you to say, Coach?" Hay appealed.

"Well," Soapy rose and picked his words carefully. "As far as football being a moulder of men, or college either, for that matter, I think that's a lot of malarkey." As the directors started and frowned he continued imperturbably. "I think kids get a few pointers from their folks when they're young. When we get 'em they're either made or spoiled—we just add a few trimmings to the job. But I'll tell you what I think a football team does do—it gives a man something to yell for—something to be proud of when it's good—something to try to fix when it's bad—and something to come back to when he's old. Anybody needs that."

He looked down the table. With the exception of Wallace, the directors nodded agreement.

"We've been lucky," Scapy spoke up deprecatingly, although he had smiled at the "so far." "Might not happen again for ten years in a small college like this."

"Now, I think it all boils down to this," Hay continued, looking at the sober faces which lined the director's table. "If our team defeats Erie we're in line for an invitation to the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena. Sierra will probably represent the West. Are you for it, gentlemen?"

"I'm against it," growled Henry Wallace, a lean and hungry individual at the far end of the table. "It gives Green Ridge the wrong kind of advertising. It places emphasis on the wrong thing. Green Ridge is an institution of learning—not a training school for athletes."

"But a winning football team builds enrollment!"

"And college football has no equal in moulding men," interposed another member of the board.

"What have you to say, Coach?" Hay appealed.

"Well," Soapy rose and picked his words carefully. "As far as football being a moulder of men, or college either, for that matter, I think that's a lot of malarkey." As the directors started and frowned he continued imperturbably. "I think kids get a few pointers from their folks when they're young. When we get 'em they're either made or spoiled—we just add a few trimmings to the job. But I'll tell you what I think a football team does do—it gives a man something to yell for—something to be proud of when it's good—something to try to fix when it's bad—and something to come back to when he's old. Anybody needs that."

He looked down the table. With the exception of Wallace, the directors nodded agreement.

"We've been lucky," Scapy spoke up deprecatingly, although he had smiled at the "so far." "Might not happen again for ten years in a small college like this."

"Now, I think it all boils down to this," Hay continued, looking at the sober faces which lined the director's table. "If our team defeats Erie we're in line for an invitation to the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena. Sierra will probably represent the West. Are you for it, gentlemen?"

"I'm against it," growled Henry Wallace, a lean and hungry individual at the far end of the table. "It gives Green Ridge the wrong kind of advertising. It places emphasis on the wrong thing. Green Ridge is an institution of learning—not a training school for athletes."

"But a winning football team builds enrollment!"

"And college football has no equal in moulding men," interposed another member of the board.

"What have you to say, Coach?" Hay appealed.

"Well," Soapy rose and picked his words carefully. "As far as football being a moulder of men, or college either, for that matter, I think that's a lot of malarkey." As the directors started and frowned he continued imperturbably. "I think kids get a few pointers from their folks when they're young. When we get 'em they're either made or spoiled—we just add a few trimmings to the job. But I'll tell you what I think a football team does do—it gives a man something to yell for—something to be proud of when it's good—something to try to fix when it's bad—and something to come back to when he's old. Anybody needs that."

He looked down the table. With the exception of Wallace, the directors nodded agreement.

"As far as the Rose Bowl is concerned, here's the setup, the coach continued softly. "If we take Erie and we're going to try—we're one of four teams eligible. One of 'em will high hat it, a couple have rules against it."

"Then that makes us the logical choice?" asked Hay. "It's not that easy. Unfortunately, we're not a big, well-known college. The public likes color in the game. But—we can get the Rose Bowl, gentlemen, if we sell the country on the idea it wants to see us there."

I suggest that we get our publicity department busy at once."

Shortly after the directors' meeting had concluded Paddy was walking across the campus, reading a letter he had just received.

"Dear Mr. O'Riley": (It read) Here's the photograph you asked for. Knowing August as I do, I can hardly believe he was too bashful to write for himself. At any rate, they tell

CHAPTER VI GENTLEMEN—We have called this special meeting of the Board of Regents of Green Ridge college to discuss a very important matter regarding athletics. William Hay, president of the board of directors, began pompously. "Coach Moreland has given us a winning team this year—so far."

"We've been lucky," Scapy spoke up deprecatingly, although he had smiled at the "so far." "Might not happen again for ten years in a small college like this."

"Now, I think it all boils down to this," Hay continued, looking at the sober faces which lined the director's table. "If our team defeats Erie we're in line for an invitation to the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena. Sierra will probably represent the West. Are you for it, gentlemen?"

"I'm against it," growled Henry Wallace, a lean and hungry individual at the far end of the table. "It gives Green Ridge the wrong kind of advertising. It places emphasis on the wrong thing. Green Ridge is an institution of learning—not a training school for athletes."

"But a winning football team builds enrollment!"

"And college football has no equal in moulding men," interposed another member of the board.

"What have you to say, Coach?" Hay appealed.

"Well," Soapy rose and picked his words carefully. "As far as football being a moulder of men, or college either, for that matter, I think that's a lot of malarkey." As the directors started and frowned he continued imperturbably. "I think kids get a few pointers from their folks when they're young. When we get 'em they're either made or spoiled—we just add a few trimmings to the job. But I'll tell you what I think a football team does do—it gives a man something to yell for—something to be proud of when it's good—something to try to fix when it's bad—and something to come back to when he's old. Anybody needs that."

He looked down the table. With the exception of Wallace, the directors nodded agreement.

"We've been lucky," Scapy spoke up deprecatingly, although he had smiled at the "so far." "Might not happen again for ten years in a small college like this."

"Now, I think it all boils down to this," Hay continued, looking at the sober faces which lined the director's table. "If our team defeats Erie we're in line for an invitation to the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena. Sierra will probably represent the West. Are you for it, gentlemen?"

"I'm against it," growled Henry Wallace, a lean and hungry individual at the far end of the table. "It gives Green Ridge the wrong kind of advertising. It places emphasis on the wrong thing. Green Ridge is an institution of learning—not a training school for athletes."

"But a winning football team builds enrollment!"

"And college football has no equal in moulding men," interposed another member of the board.

"What have you to say, Coach?" Hay appealed.

"Well," Soapy rose and picked his words carefully. "As far as football being a moulder of men, or college either, for that matter, I think that's a lot of malarkey." As the directors started and frowned he continued imperturbably. "I think kids get a few pointers from their folks when they're young. When we get 'em they're either made or spoiled—we just add a few trimmings to the job. But I'll tell you what I think a football team does do—it gives a man something to yell for—something to be proud of when it's good—something to try to fix when it's bad—and something to come back to when he's old. Anybody needs that."

He looked down the table. With the exception of Wallace, the directors nodded agreement.

"We've been lucky," Scapy spoke up deprecatingly, although he had smiled at the "so far." "Might not happen again for ten years in a small college like this."

"Now, I think it all boils down to this," Hay continued, looking at the sober faces which lined the director's table. "If our team defeats Erie we're in line for an invitation to the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena. Sierra will probably represent the West. Are you for it, gentlemen?"

"I'm against it," growled Henry Wallace, a lean and hungry individual at the far end of the table. "It gives Green Ridge the wrong kind of advertising. It places emphasis on the wrong thing. Green Ridge is an institution of learning—not a training school for athletes."

"But a winning football team builds enrollment!"

"And college football has no equal in moulding men," interposed another member of the board.

"What have you to say, Coach?" Hay appealed.

"Well," Soapy rose and picked his words carefully. "As far as football being a moulder of men, or college either, for that matter, I think that's a lot of malarkey." As the directors started and frowned he continued imperturbably. "I think kids get a few pointers from their folks when they're young. When we get 'em they're either made or spoiled—we just add a few trimmings to the job. But I'll tell you what I think a football team does do—it gives a man something to yell for—something to be proud of when it's good—something to try to fix when it's bad—and something to come back to when he's old. Anybody needs that."

He looked down the table. With the exception of Wallace, the directors nodded agreement.

Dutch inquired of one of the players who was limping slightly. "Housemaid's knee?"

"No. I just tackled O'Riley, the invisible man. By the way, Paddy, how's about giving out with the blue print of that sidewinder of yours?"

"That's like asking a fan dancer to wave goodbye," chuckled Dutch as his friend said nothing, but began to whistle blithely. "You take that from O'Riley and you take all." He sat down and picked up a newspaper.

"Yeah," persisted Donovan, "but I've got it all figured out how I could use that run against the Erie line."

"So have I," murmured Paddy. "Who did that?" Dutch interrupted the chatter homely. His thick hand shook as he held out the paper he had been reading. The sports page featured a story headlined as "WILL SHE SAY YES?" and subtitled: "If Green Ridge Receives Rose Bowl Nomination Duties—Schultz—Will Win Star's Favor, He Said." Underneath was Florence's autographed picture, one of Dutch, and a half-column story.

"Wow! What a pipelol!" shouted Donovan, grabbing the paper. "And she knew him when... and how?"

"Listen, Irish," Dutch broke in angrily. "I know you did this. I'm not clowning. If this picture in the dog house with Florence..."

"...it'll be because she's got no romance in her soul, huh, August dear!" mimicked his roommate.

There was rejection out at the Occidental studios in Hollywood when the story about Florence Taylor broke.

"Just what the front office ordered," chorled Burke, the head of the publicity department. "Here's our angle to put Taylor over."

"This Green Ridge publicity kid doesn't know what he's got," agreed an assistant.

"Well, tell him. Come on, crack out with some ideas."

"Say," cried Burke's secretary, "I saw Florence at the Green Ridge day night with Ossie Merrill, the Sierra fullback."

"They're a cinch to represent the West," Burke was jubilant. "A Rose Bowl triangle! What could be cuter? Gettie—take a wire! Publicity Director, Green Ridge University. Follow our campaign. We'll put you in Rose Bowl, Keep Schultz in line. Advise any new angles? Hop it up!"

"But what will Taylor say?" the assistant inquired dubiously.

"She'll be sore at first but when I explain she'll eat it up. Schultz wants to make the Rose Bowl, doesn't he, and she wants to be in lights. It's natural."

"Say, you don't think she really likes that dumb-looking Schultz kid, do you?" inquired Gettie.

"Heck! There's nothing wrong with him—that good haircut won't fix."

"Did you read this guff?" Paddy demanded of his roommate one night not long after the publicity mills had started to grind. "They've got Cheers smeared all over the papers. Listen to this: 'The gridiron triangle is now a quadrangle. A dispatch from Bellport, Ohio, former home town of Ossie Merrill, reveals that Ossie may be engaged to Mary (Cheers) Reynolds, the girl he left behind and whom he visited last summer. Another revelation is that Paddy O'Riley, second string quarterback for Green Ridge, is also a Bellport boy and is carrying the torch for Cheers. When questioned last night Ossie didn't seem to remember Cheers' name. So if Green Ridge meets Sierra at Pasadena on New Year's Day—look out for fireworks!"

Looking up from his reading Paddy saw his former friend shaking with