Many Want Mining Stake

J. H. Batcheller, secretary of the old Mining board until it was succeeded by the newly created department of geology and mining industries wants it distinctly understood that he is not in a position to hand out grubstakes to aspiring miners.

Since the newspapers announced the action of the legislature in creating the new department and earmarking a certain amount of the appropriation for supplying grubstakes, Batcheller, who is also professor of mining engineering at Oregon State college, has been receiving requests almost daily for assistance under the terms of the new law.

He points out that those who are interested in any phase of the new department had best watch the press for announcements of the organization to be set up. With the recent announcement of the personnel of the new mining commission, organization will doubtless be completed in the near future.

Let us attend this service and gladden our hearts with the message "Jesus is risen from the dead."
