Light Eating For Summer Advised

In summer time when the temperature reaches above eighty and there is considerable humidity, over enthusiasm for everything melts away likewise ones appetite. This is a signal not to overeat in hot weather.

Milk is one of the most valuable protein foods and should be used in the summer time to take the place of the meats as a chief source of protein. With our modern methods of keeping milk in sterilized bottles and tightly capped you can obtain a pasteurized nutritive food in practically all public eating places.

The green leafy vegetables are rich in vitamins and should be used more extensively during the summer season. Green vegetables—spinach, chard, lettuce, peas, string beans, are also a rich source of iron and health essentials.

As thirst quenchers in the summer time there is usually a desire for something stronger than water. There is nothing that can take the place of fresh fruit juices such as orange, lemon or lime.

Wear loose, light clothing. Protect the head from the direct rays of the sun. Take sun baths cautiously—when overdone the sun's rays may do much harm.
