Refrigerator Use For Efficiency Explained

To get the most service from a mechanical refrigerator for the least cost, it is necessary to use discretion as to its placement and use, says Everett Davis, extension specialist in agricultural engineering at Oregon State college.

It is a good idea, if possible, to place the refrigerator convenient to the outside door, the work cabinet, the sink, table, and dining room, but not too near the stove or out in the sunshine, Davis says. Some of the "don'ts" to be remembered in connection with its use are as follows: Don't put hot foods into the refrigerator; don't crowd the shelves and hinder free air circulation; don't open the door unnecessarily; and don't store things in the refrigerator that do not need refrigerating, such as potatoes, canned goods and bananas.

It is desirable, although not absolutely necessary, he says, to have an electric refrigerator on a separate circuit. If possible the door should open away from the work space near it. The cabinet should stand from two to three inches out from the wall.

For ordinary operation, temperatures of not less than 40 deg. F. or more than 45 deg. F. or 50 deg. F. are recommended. When the temperature control has been set for quick freezing, it should be reset to the usual position when the freezing operation is completed. It is also essential that the cooling unit be defrosted regularly for best results.

HI-WAYS TO HEALTH by ADA R. MAYNE OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

Serious contemplation of breaking up summer housekeeping at the beach... children hilariously announcing their arrival from camps... shopping tours for sturdy shoes... mothers anxiously adjusting hems in last year's dresses, hoping earnestly that a few of them will do... for very soon schools are to open again.

After full days at the beach or mountains, this period of waiting for the opening of school is a difficult transition for the children. They are lost in this new environment. The every-day experiences that become so familiar during the months of summer, are out of the question now. There is the eternal question "What shall I do now?" Days all too short for the many things to be done, have suddenly become empty days.

However, even empty days in no way "diminish" the tremendous appetites developed by long hours out-of-doors. Each meal offers a highlight in the day. Simple nourishing foods are eaten with a relish. Children having been away from home declare that mother is the finest cook in the world.

Why not maintain this enthusiasm as long as possible? Offer the children a wide variety of wholesome dishes, and see to it that every day each child receives fruits and vegetables and his quota of one quart of milk. Popularize simple desserts by allowing the child to prepare a dessert for the entire family. And when it is served, the adults in the family must remember that it is important to comment favorably upon the product.
