Safety Depends On Every Car Driver

Every Oregon motorist can perform a service of benefit to his state by a courteous attitude toward visiting motor tourists, declares Dr. E. B. McDaniel, president of the Oregon State Motor association, discussing the importance of such a spirit among resident motorists.

Good motoring manners as well as a proper regard for the business value of Oregon's immense and growing motor tourist trade requires an attitude of hospitable courtesy toward "the stranger within our gates," the motorist leader declared.

"While display of discourtesy are always a thing to be avoided on the highway," he continued, "they are particularly deplorable when the display of bad motoring manners is directed toward a visiting motorist."

"Courtesy is an essential part of hospitality and the Oregon motorist who fails to heed that fact performs a distinct disservice to his state."

"A too rigid insistence as to the right of way, unnecessary and irritable blasts of the horn, and other failures of courtesy are bad enough when another home state motorist is involved."

"But when they are directed toward a motorist with out-of-state license plates on his car they very definitely jeopardize Oregon's reputation for hospitality. Visitors are particularly sensitive to the treatment they receive. They eagerly appreciate courtesy, but they also resent and bitterly remember the lack of it."

More People Coming West

Eastern touring agencies were swamped with inquiries on western recreational areas this year and travelers headed toward the Pacific in greater numbers than ever before, according to Elmer Jenkins, manager of the American Automobile association's national touring bureau in Washington, D. C., who was an Oregon visitor this week.

Estimating an increase of around 25 per cent in east to west travel, he said that the demand for complete maps and touring literature had made it necessary to plan more detailed sectional maps and tour books.

"We are considering a new series of maps for the western area," Jenkins said, "simply because the touring agencies east of the Mississippi are demanding more and more material dealing with the west."

"Oregon and the northwest in general is becoming one of the most attractive vacation areas in the nation and it is the policy of the American Automobile association to keep in stride with all travel trends."

Jenkins said he considered Oregon's hotels and resorts well above average, and in a position to render satisfactory service to all visitors. He predicted, however, much greater development in this line of business.
