Trashy Fallow Draws Interest

Possibilities and limitations of trashy fallow proved to be a question attracting major interest at the annual meeting of the Eastern Oregon Wheat League. Reports of varied experiences by farmers and a preliminary report by D. D. Hill on research work being done on the subject, were added to the past experiences of the branch experiment station, resulting in recommendations endorsing the use of trashy fallow when properly handled.

"The use of trashy summer fallow is generally recognized as an effective means of helping to prevent losses of soil by erosion . . .

maintain soil organic matter and fertility," the report stated. "Trashy fallow does not differ in fundamental principle from the moisture and nitrate saving methods that have been widely used for many years. The tillage practices should be done at the same time and the fallow should be just as free of weeds as when all straw is turned under.

"The proper method of trashy fallow will vary according to conditions on the individual farm. In the lower yielding areas and on the lighter soils the mold board plow, with mold board removed or modified will leave more trash on the surface than the one-way disk plow, and it will leave the soil in a more desirable cloddy condition. Where the one-way disk plow is used under these conditions, the plow should travel at a low rate of speed, two miles per hour, and not more than four or five inches deep. On heavy soils and in the higher yielding areas, the one-way disk plow is suggested as a desirable implement.

"The use of more straw spreaders is recommended in all except the low yielding areas," the report continues. "In regions of light stubble, pasturing tends to reduce the amount of stubble on the surface, as practically all wheat soils in the Columbia basin are low in organic matter. This accumulation of straw on the surface in high yielding fields may necessitate spring planting. A rod weeder is recommended as a desirable tillage implement for the cultivation of trashy fallow."

A Good Trade

"Willie, I don't like that car you brought home last week. I'll give you $5 if you'll get rid of him."

"All right, papa! A deal is a deal."

Next day Willie asked his father for the $5. "Here's your money. How did you get rid of him?" asked papa.

"Why," answered Willie, "I just traded him to Jackie for three yellow puppies."

Doctor—Humph! I can't quite diagnose your case. I think it's drink.

Patient—Oh, I see. Now, look here, doctor. Would you like me to come again when you're sober?

APPLES FOR WINTER CHEER

The usual January let-down with cold damp days, winter epidemics, and many times mental let-downs, calls for winter cheer of some sort. In days past this winter cheer was often found in a cellar of red apples.

This cellar of apples was very versatile. It lent itself to in-between meal crunches, to combinations with nuts, popcorn, and cheese for freestone snacks, and for puddings, jellies, butters and pies until spring. Many times it was the only fresh fruit seen until the ripening of the spring cherry. The harder with this limitation did not appear deprived.

Today the apple is not exactly a substitute for the economical, popular and nutritional ice cream dessert, but it claims its position in relation to the vegetable department, and in this way adds much to the winter's limited fare.

The apple supplies its share of health protection. It is its good share of both Vitamin B and C, but but contains only a small amount of Vitamin A. "It's an apple a day or the doctor to pay" precept because of its amount of roughage. When eaten raw it gives good exercise to teeth and gums. Furthermore, young children can eat it without difficulty, and for them frequently becomes a candy substitute.

Today recall a few of the apple recipes that you have probably exercised actively in past years. Sweet Potatoes and Apples make one classic combination when served with pork chops, and a green salad. The Apple Casserole is another vegetable entree that makes only an omelet, a crisp salad, and perhaps an ice cream dessert to complete a simple yet appealing dinner. You'll notice both recipes use generous amounts of butter. This is not only because it gives better protection with its greater amount of vitamin A; but also be-
