Many Colds Held Contagious By Health Board

All colds are not contagious but many of them are of the communicable type which means that they are spread from person to person by contact. It is a prevalent attitude to dismiss what appears to be an ordinary cold as something that cannot be avoided. This is a serious mistake; common colds are frequently the forerunner of influenza, pneumonia, tuberculosis, sinus and other infections. Common colds are seen frequently among school children and it is important that preventative measures be adopted in schools. Good teaching will do much toward reducing colds. The children should be taught to cover their coughs and sneezes. Proper hand-washing should be practiced and the use of common articles such as cups, eating utensils, and foods should be prohibited. In addition to this all children with acute infectious colds should be excluded from school. Where every child with the first sign of a cold to remain home, colds in the schools would be reduced to a minimum. Cold cause serious constitutional disturbances which permit more serious diseases to get a foothold.

Colds occasion a greater loss of time from school and work than any other single cause. Fortunately, however, there is much that can be done to keep from getting a cold. Low temperature in the home, the school room and the working place will do much to eliminate colds. A temperature of 70 degrees Fahrenheit will not only be more comfortable but will reduce the hazards caused by overheating. Overheating reduces the resistance and increases the susceptibility to colds. Outdoor exercise in proper clothing increases the resistance. A well balanced daily diet including milk, fresh fruits, and vegetables will help maintain the bodily resistance at a high peak. Too much work and too little sleep may open the way for an infection. In the winter time when nature's sunshine is scarce it is important that everything possible be done to build up the resistance to cold. If, in spite of these precautions you feel a chill coming on with sneezing, coughing or a sore throat, go to bed. Rest at the onset of a cold usually means a quick end to the cold, but if it does not clear up promptly, send for the family physician. Don't neglect a cold for most cases of pneumonia start as common colds.
