Local Places Named In Odd Manners

The Dalles in Wasco county was first called Wascopam, Indian name significant of the bowl like arrangement of the canyon walls surrounding the city.

The present name of the city originated with French voyageurs of the Hudson's Bay Company who found a resemblance between the flat-basaltic rocks hemming in the narrow channel of the Columbia and the flagstones (les dalles) of their native village streets.

Hardman in Morrow county, called so today for the man who was the town's first postmaster, was once officially Dairyville, but commonly known as Rawdog. Later having united with its former rival village, Yaller Dog, a mile away, it was called Dog town.

Palmehn, now Madras in Jefferson county, was named for a sheep raiser by the name of Palm. The name was changed when postal authorities found it to be confusing with the name Paulina.

TODAY'S QUOTE

"Much has been said about the need of developing new leaders in the colleges to help the world out of its difficulties. I think what is even more necessary is the development of wise, tolerant 'middle men' who can choose wise leaders instead of following plausible speaking demagogues."—Mrs. Beatrice Walton Sackett, member of the State Board of Higher Education, in an address to students at Oregon State college.

Figures on total farm income in Oregon and industrial workers' income in the United States show remarkable similarity in trends over a period of years, according to data published by the O. S. C. and extension service. The relationship is not so close in respect to farm income from some commodities as for others, however. Consumer demand and prices for certain items like meats, butter, and fruits and vegetables, tend to follow the fortunes of industrial workers in a greater degree than demand and price for some other commodities like wheat and potatoes for which demand is less "elastic" and prices react largely to the size of the supply, as well as being affected somewhat by the strength of demand.

G. V. School

By Dolores Simon.
Grass Valley joined all other schools in the county in Moro Saturday, April 30, where they did their share in the county music festival.

A high school dance will be held in the gymnasium, which has been decorated by the junior class. The secret of what the decoration represents will not be revealed until Saturday when the dance will be held. The alumni, school board and all the high school students in the county are invited. Refreshments will be served.

The local declamatory contest was held Tuesday afternoon, May 3rd at the school house. In the first division LeRoy Spoor was first, Marie Blagg, second and Gene Roberts third; in the second division Eileen Lemley was first, and in the third division Emma Jean Eakin was first. The final will be held in Kent Friday, May 6.
