Serious Accidents Kill Many In One.

In spite of the fact that notable decreases in highway fatalities have been recorded in Oregon this year, the summer months have brought added evidence that carelessness at the wheel of an automobile may result in death, Secretary of State Earl Snell reports.

Four persons were killed on the Columbia River highway east of The Dalles because one driver, traveling at an extremely high rate of speed, couldn't wait before passing another car as a third vehicle approached, and as a result his vehicle was sandwiched between the other car and the oncoming truck.

In Union county a car sped down a steep, winding hill, crashed through a guard rail and tumbled several hundred feet to the bottom of a canyon, apparently because the driver dozed at the wheel. This mishap occurred in broad daylight under good driving conditions.

A driver of a truck operating out of Salem was killed one evening when he failed to note a string of flat cars standing on a railroad track at a grade crossing. His hurtling machine knocked one of the flat cars entirely off the track and moved several others.

"In many cases just like these, the driver might be guilty of slight carelessness and escape without injury,' Snell commented "Yet these practices, if indulged in regularly, are bound to result in accidents sooner or later. Particularly at this time of year, when good conditions tempt drivers to travel fast, motorists should be careful about passing other cars, crosing railroad tracks and rounding curves on unfamiliar roads."

More Bulking Fills Elevators

There is more bulking of grain this year into the elevators of the county than for several years and unless provision is made for consigning wheat or selling it the bulk storage places will not be able to hold the grain designed for them. Because of the delay necessary for the government loan and the low price no quick movement of this crop is expected and warehouses and elevators will probably have to care for the crop for some months to come unless a change comes soon.
