New $2,500,000 sugar beet plant to herald making of sugar in state and "Rebirth" of Eastern Oregon lands

Six "sweet" Oregonians shown cultivating an 105-acre field of sugar beets belonging to George Ward near the "boom" town of Nyssa, Oregon. Left to right: the pretty "ranchettes" are Zeala Benton, Dorothy Janson, Viola Pullen, Irene Poage, Floy Byram and Marilyn Cottle. Lower left: Exterior view of the huge plant located on an 190-acre site which is one of the most modern plants in America. Lower right: Inside the huge Amalgamated Sugar Company plant at Nyssa as girls ride the sliced beet conveyor in the process of making sugar.

Nearing completion at Nyssa, in eastern Oregon, is the huge sugar beet refinery of The Amalgamated Sugar Company which will soon be manufacturing sugar to be made in Oregon and inaugurating an important new industry for the Webfoot state.

The coming of the big plant heralds the "rebirth" of eastern Oregon as an important agricultural and industrial section. Due to the new plant, farmers are settling on 150,000 acres of reclaimed sugarbrush lands, irrigated by the Owyhee, Black Canyon and Arrowrock Dams in the Vale-Owyhee project. The new factory will bring $2,500,000 of wealth yearly to the section, and is "booming" this remote section of the state.

The "monster of modern science" turns the beet into sparkling, refined and pure sugar and is one of the most modern plants of its kind in America. It will handle 2000 tons of beets daily and can store a half-million 100-pound bags of sugar. It has a capacity to supply three-fourths of the sugar needs of Oregon's inhabitants.

President H. A. Benning, of Amalgamated, will have 175 men working in the plant for a period of 100 days, starting in the fall.

HI-WAYS TO HEALTH
by ADA R. MAYNE
OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

Tingling with excitement school boys and girls everywhere are counting few remaining days of play. Not really play days, for there are quite as many details to attend to as in preparing for an extensive voyage, in order to have a really good school start. The summer's activity above all things has given a protective coating of hardness from sun and wind that seems to promise insurance against all ills for the year. But, this alone, is not the test for preventiveness. Too many boys and girls are made unhappy because they have not had a thorough eye examination, because they are feeling pangs of tooth ache, or are finding it difficult to adjust themselves to regular hours of rest and meal time.

A trip to an oculist and dentist from a preventive medicine precaution at this time seems even more important than the new dress, shirt, or shoes.

These having been checked, the Mother confines herself to serious self-disciplining in the matter of maintaining regular rest hours and meal times. This is the one definite time when a check is also made on the adequate inclusion of protective foods, milk, fruits, vegetables and eggs. She sighs, but realizing their importance, she resigns herself to careful meal planning to include them, each day, without guess.

Likewise from the meal standpoint, she may want her child to patronize a school lunchroom, if it is equipped with one. She determines this fact to have a thoroughly good start, to check on the types of "meals" available. She hopes that the plate-lunch, adequate at a nominal price, and containing milk and a fruit or vegetable is being served. But, if this is not true she makes frequent inquiry to know that the selections are balanced in the protective foods.

At home she realizes that soon the greater number of green vegetables and fruits will be limited, and she endeavors then to get adequate amounts of Vitamin A through ample amounts of milk and butter. Leading pediatricians throughout the country continue to maintain that the growing child is protected most adequately if he has the equivalent of a quart of milk every day.

Preparing for school in modern way is no hardship and it eliminates future disappointment in loss of school days and pain. No child suffers disappointment or pain without having a like effect on the parents. . . . it seems then almost a selfish gesture in protecting a child adequately, but one most worthy.

- So check:
(a) a visit to the oculist
(b) a visit to the dentist
(c) regular meal times
(d) regular rest periods
