THE DAYS BETWEEN
At this time you have your Christmas dinner plans well in hand and are on a tear to put them into execution. Some one has said that the planning of Christmas menus is like trimming the tree, you bring out your choice and favorite recipes and hang them on the prominent branches of your menus. And so it is; for every homemaker chooses the dishes that she knows will add the sparkle to the holiday feast, long anticipated by her brood.

But the Christmas dinner is usually just the beginning of a week of festivity. This is the season that just does something to you and makes you seek out old friends, old neighbors, the almost-forgotten relative. Indeed, it is the season of happy hearts and those who make the most of it are the very ones who reap the most enjoyment.

Your home-for-the-holiday member of the family will appreciate the festivities that require the least time in preparation. If you budget your time for household tasks and food preparation you will have the time for the many things you long to do during these days between. Have in mind
