Two Farmers Reap Harvest Of Insurance

Ernest Christopherson of Ione, in Morrow county and George L. Barnett of Kent in Sherman county are the two first Oregon wheat growers to have their applications for crop insurance payments approved by the state office, announces Clyde Kiddle, supervisor of the federal crop insurance program in Oregon under the AAA.

Christopherson had 953 acres insured under four policies. He is asking indemnities on two of them involving 512 acres which will yield below normal.

"This is the first crop failure in my history of farming," said Christopherson in regard to his application. "I have farmed the present land since 1916. It surely is lucky for me that I took out insurance this year." The crop insurance corporation will doubtless pay Christopherson in cash rather than in wheat, according to Kiddle.

George Barnett had a policy covering 171 acres of winter wheat with a guaranteed production of 1552 bushels. Drouth and frosts, however, reduced his yield to only about 427 bushels. As a result, he will receive 1125 bushels from stored wheat held by the insurance corporation. His premium amount to 248 bushels.

Oregon wheat growers have 708 policies in effect this year out of a total of 834 insurance applications filed. It is too early to predict the extent of losses to be made, says Kiddle, but preliminary reports coming in from Gilliam, Jefferson, Morrow and Sherman counties, particularly, indicate that growers will collect indemnity payments amounting to somewhere under 100,000 bushels, perhaps no more than 70,000.

The Corvallis AAA office has just been notified that details of the 1940 crop insurance program have been approved and that they provide for a somewhat simplified and improved plan for the coming year. More of the work of issuing policies will be done in the counties and hereafter the insurance will be written at the same time the application is filed.
