Traffic Deaths Less Numerous

Oregon pared her traffic death rate from 11.8 persons killed per 100,000,000 miles traveled to 10.9 for the first nine months of 1939 compared to the same period in 1938, figures compiled by Earl Snell, secretary of state, revealed today.

The state was able to effect this decrease by virtue of a reduction in the number of persons killed in traffic accidents while travel was on the increase, Snell explained.

Motor vehicles mileage in Oregon totaled 2,082,387,346 miles during the first nine months of 1939, an increase of 5.8 percent over the total of 1,966,659,562 miles for the corresponding period a year ago.

Traffic deaths, meanwhile, dropped from 233 in 1938 to 238 in 1939, reports to Snell's office showed.

"If Oregon drivers will continue their careful driving through the remaining months of this year, the death rate at the end of the year should show a satisfactory improvement," Snell declared.

Pedestrians Rights Better Observed

Courteous consideration of the rights of pedestrians has improved in at least two Oregon cities, recent reports to the state safety division at Salem reveal.

In Bend, city officials sponsored a courteous driving campaign during which observers were stationed about the city to look for drivers who observed traffic regulations and were good, safe drivers. Motorists picked out by the observers received letters of congratulation from city officials and from Earl Snell, secretary of state and sponsor of the state safety campaign.

As a result of this contest, city officials of Bend reported many drivers who were courteous and careful of their driving. The practice of stopping to give pedestrians in cross walks the right-of-way was noted particularly, it was said.

An editorial in a Klamath Falls paper recently commented on the fact that the practice of giving pedestrians the right-of-way at cross walks was increasingly observed in that city.

One of the most important regulations governing traffic today is this matter of giving the pedestrian the right-of-way while he is using a regularly designated cross walk, Snell declared, saying that in many instances failure of the driver to observe this rule resulted in accidents.

"Most drivers, if they stop to think about it, realize that the pedestrian is entitled to the right-of-way so long as he is abiding by regulations, but often they do not take the time to think and as a result expect the pedestrian to stop and let them go by," the secretary of state said. "It is more than good sportsmanship for the motorist to yield to the pedestrian when the latter is walking according to rules and by the same token it is up to the pedestrian to cross at the proper places rather than wandering across the highway any place or jaywalking in the cities."

First Congressional District Raises Turkey

Special, Washington, D. C.

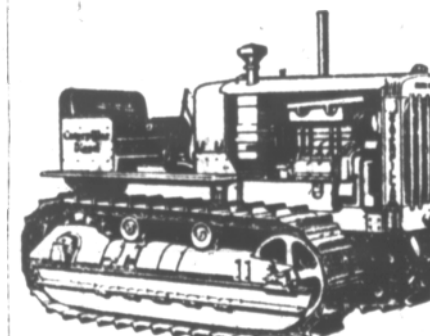

There are more turkeys raised in the first congressional district of Oregon than in other parts of the United States. James W. Mott, representative from that district, has made a strong plea with the state department against lowering the tariff on turkeys from Argentina in the pending trade agreement. Mott's statement has been supplemented by the Roseburg chamber of commerce, Douglas County Taxpayers league, Oregon State Director of Agriculture J. D. Mickle, Alton Huhley of Salem and many other growers who fear an invasion of the American market. It is estimated Oregon's production this year will be 30,000,000 pounds, a considerable proportion coming from eastern Oregon, but principally from the west side of the Cascades.

Here's some Horse Sense

Horsepower

Horsepower isn't much good if you can't use it. And by use it we mean - put it to work when you want it - where you need it. For example, the "Caterpillar" Diesel D2 Tractor turns more than 80% of its engine horsepower into drawbar pull. That's because of its simple, direct transmission and the positive grip of its tracks on all kinds of ground. Try one and you'll see what we mean by "horsepower you can use."

Moral: Don't Throw Your Jewels in the Garbage

protein, and other minerals and vitamins - will be adequately provided too.

This means that a dish as complete as present nutrition knowledge allows would best promote the health of the teeth and such would include the following:

Milk: a quart daily for children and a pint or more for adults. Vegetable: two or more servings daily.

Fruits: two or more servings daily, one of citrus fruit or tomatoes. A rich source of vitamin D every day as cod liver oil, vitamin D milk. Some foods that require chewing in every meal.

If milk is used for drinking at each meal, it is very easy to include a quart a day in the child's diet. However, milk used in cooking has the same food value as the milk we drink. The amount of milk used may easily be increased by making milk dishes, such as milk puddings, cream soups and escalloped dishes.

The one thing to be remembered is that meals planned to include the necessary elements for good health are also best for building sound teeth.

88 DRIVERS LOSE

Eighty-eight drivers lost their operator's licenses through suspensions and revocations during the month of September, it was announced today by Earl Snell, secretary of state. This is twenty percent less than the total for the same month a year ago when suspensions and revocations totaled 111.

Of the 88 cases, 12 were from Portland courts, 66 from other courts in Oregon and 10 from out-of-state courts.

Cases for the year to date totaled 677, a decrease of 7 percent from the total for last year at the same time. In 377 operator's cases this year defendants were driving cars not registered in their names.

Fox Farmers Face Competition

Silver Fox farms, many located in Oregon and Washington, are facing competition from Europe because of the war. Some 300,000 silver fox pelts are produced annually on American fur farms and this nation is almost independent of European supplies. Cut off from their usual outlet, European furs may be dumped on the American market next spring, according to statements received by the committee for reciprocity information. This would result in a reduction of price to consumers, but too great a supply of foreign furs will make it unprofitable for the American grower to continue silver fox production. Government officials have been warned that between 500,000 and 600,000 silver fox pelts may be shipped into the United States from Canadian and European farms. The situation is described as the most critical in the 30-year history of American fur farming.

Hi-Ways to Health by ADA R-MAYNE OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

Nearly 100% of all babies have perfect teeth, but five or six years later when the babies have grown to be "first graders" at school 90% of these children have one or more cavities. Mothers lament the cavities, of course, and say they cannot understand it, protesting that "he always had the best of foods."

Dr. Mary Swartz Rose recently said that "we must test diets not by what is on the menu but by what is in the child." Only such an evaluation can give a true picture of the results in health protection that can be expected from a diet.

Cod liver oil on the pantry shelf does not protect against rickets—it must get inside the baby before it can help his bones and teeth to grow straight, and if day after day Johnny leaves half of his milk in his glass he may not actually get enough for good growth and health, even though mother buys a quart each day for him.

Cavities in teeth may show within a year or so that there is some kind of a deficiency somewhere. But there may be other deficiencies too, the result of which are not so quickly or so readily apparent.

Dr. Rose urges that special attention be placed on diets rich in calcium and iron, and in vitamins A, B and C. If enough of these five essentials "get inside the child each day" it is quite likely that all other food factors—energy,
