AN ENDING EPOCH

The passing of E. O. "Dutch" McCoy is another break in the now well shattered ranks of that army of strong, ambitious, self-reliant young men who came to this country in the early eighties to make homes, and whose activities made this county into a fine wheat producing section from a land of grass and cattle.

They took up land, built the roads, started the towns, established schools, married the school teachers, literally built their own railroad line to take their wheat to market and by the sheer force of their characters made this section of Oregon one of the most desirable spots in which to live in the entire United States.

Now they are dropping off, one by one, and we of this generation, unless attention is called to it, little note their departure. They were of another day, a day when men did things on their own when community enterprises were started—and finished—by local men by their own efforts.

Those who are left are of another generation. They can but shut their eyes and see the bunch grass making the hills yellow in the sun, they can see the first crude plows opening the virgin soil, the development of the towns, transportation, farming methods.

In the active life time of these men a raw country has been made into a modern agricultural wheat factory and that is an event that should go down in history to the everlasting credit of their enterprise.

E. O. McCoy was a leader among this generation. When in the legislature he pushed through the bill for the establishment of Sherman county and, the story goes, it was a difficult task. He bought the wheat, built warehouses to store it, interested in the banks and business houses that aided the growth of the country and thus had as great a part as anyone in making this area what it has become.

His last few years were a triumph of will over age and physical decay. He could barely see, yet kept up with difficult reading and remained well informed to the end. He continued to transact his own business despite his physical infirmities. But at last he goes to join the ranks of those whom he knew forty, fifty and sixty years ago when life—and the country—were young.

CHRISTMAS 1939

Here it is Christmas, the natal day of the Prince of Peace, the time for peace on earth and good will toward men. There are nations that do not subscribe to sentiment. They are the non-Christian nations, the benighted people of the world.

Among these nations little Japan is trying to conquer massive China using war materials furnished by the civilized peoples of the western hemisphere. It is a very bad war with lots of the burning and plundering that makes up any war.

Christmas on the civilized side of the world finds a picture that is slightly different. Russia, huge and powerful has attacked Finland and although not having too much luck so far will probably conquer in time unless material outside aid can be brought to the Finns.

England, France and Germany have declared war although not doing much fighting about it. Among the neutral nations there is fear of what may happen to them when real armed conflict begins.

In this country we may overlook the troubles of the remainder of the world for a day and feast on fat fowl and rich pastry, as is our wont on patriotic and religious holidays. It won't last long for if the world loses its standard of living we will eventually follow.

It now appears that the day on the calendar marked, "beginning of winter" may really be that. Certainly, nothing that could be construed as winter weather has occurred to date.

PERCENTAGE

Whether the sinking of the Graf told to leave the harbor at Monte-Spee by its own crew after being video is indicative of a lack of spirit on the part of the Germans as has been suggested by several writers within the last few days or whether it is a sign of war on a "percentage" basis as football used to be played by Andy Smith is a question not yet settled.

Certainly there was nothing that smacked of heroism in the scuttling of the new pocket battleship. Few lives were lost, however. No captain and crew can make much of an appearance before the world by burning ships and rowing carefully away from them.

The suicide of the captain might indicate that for his part he would have rather fought and went down as tradition indicates a battleship should, than blow her up himself although by orders.

The Spee and the Columbe on successive days have been a serious blow to the German navy in losses and their habit of self-destruction does nothing to ameliorate the world's sentiment. If this be "percentage" war it is so far as unpopular as percentage football was, even when it was winning.

FINN MONEY

The payment of some $234,000 by Finland to the United States has been put in a special fund by order of the president so that it may be returned for use of that fighting country.

While having as much sympathy and admiration for the Finns as any one, it is impossible to see any sense in this action from any point of view. In the first place it endangers our neutrality, although it must be admitted that neutrality is being used to cover some rather bald sins these days. It uses the suffering Finns as a means of demonstrating to the people of the United States the attributes of the great humanitarian in the white house. And furthermore it is the bunk.

If the people of the United States want to aid the Finns they can and will do it a darn sight more generously than a mere two or three hundred thousand dollars worth and without giving them back their own payment, either.

In Other Days

The annual rush for automobile license plates is now under way. The temporary tables have been installed in the corridors outside the licensing department and each day finds an increasingly long line of applicants awaiting their turn to trade a five dollar bill for a pair of the shiny new blue and white plates.

Transportation of passengers in private automobiles on a "share expense" arrangement without a PUC permit is in violation of the Oregon Motor Transportation act, O. R. Bean, public utilities commissioner warned this week.

Interest payments on Oregon's bonded debt have been reduced by more than $1,000,000 a year since 1928, according to Walter E. Pearson, state treasurer. In 1928 with state bonds hitting their peak at $66,062,810 the state was paying $2,928,323 in annual interest charges. This year with the debt load reduced to $38,706,085 the annual interest charge has been cut to $1,771,288. Pearson points out that if the state had issued callable bonds that could now be refunded at the prevailing low interest rates this annual interest charge could be still further reduced to about one-half its present proportions.

The state's irreducible school fund is suffering through competition affected by federal and private lending agencies, according to Lewis Griffith, clerk of the State Land Board. In spite of the low interest rates and favorable terms on which school fund loans are offered to Oregon farmers the board now has approximately $250,000 lying idle in its coffers and bringing in no returns to the school fund, Griffith pointed out.

Of 10,987 drouth families in Oregon only 4000 have been able to establish themselves without help, according to FSA.

Few advocates of rural electrification or creation of public utility districts in the Pacific Northwest have any idea of the amount of power required to operate the appliances most common in homes. Department of labor (not Federal Power Commission nor REA) has just issued a bulletin on the subject. According to this government document, here are the estimate number of kilowatt-hours required annually for eight electric appliances.

Flatiron 80; vacuum cleaners 24; washing machines 30; toasters 30; radios 100; refrigerators 420; ironing machines 125; ranges 1200 k.w.h. They add up to 2000 k.w.h. for a year.

Here is how one hand washes another: Triple A made available 1,292,341 pounds of hairy vetch and Austrian winter pea seed to farmers in Oregon and Washington (where the seeds are produced) to increase the supply of winter legume seeds available for southern farmers next fall. The seeds are furnished in lieu of conservation payments for carrying out the soil building program. Oregon received 1,216,141 pounds of seed for replanting; Washington 76,200 pounds. Triple A has also been distributing superphosphate in the program, distributing 2444 tons in Oregon and 1675 tons in Washington.

At no time of year does ice cream fit into the picture as it does at this season. With all the baking of cookies and cakes that is going on in kitchens everywhere in preparation for Christmas, it is good to know that with a minimum amount of effort you can have ice cream to serve with the delicious sweets you have ready and tucked away for quick entertaining. A more popular dessert would be hard to find.

For those of you who know the convenience of buying ice cream at the grocery or corner drug store know also the satisfaction of choosing from a number of flavors and speciality combinations which are now offered for holiday use. If you buy your ice cream or sherbet you don't have to wait until the last minute for it can be stored in a refrigerator tray for several hours. Or you can ask to have ice cream wrapped with dry ice as most dealers are prepared to do.

If you like to make your ice cream there are many mixtures and flavors possible which can be put together quickly and which are really fun to make. Cranberry Sherbet, for instance, can be made in a jiffy and will appeal to holiday appetites. The recipe for Cranberry Sherbet is given here with others that sound like Christmas to us.

Cranberry Sherbet One can, or one and a half cups of strained cranberry sauce One lemon One orange
