Agriculture, from all sources, state, federal and private spends 1-7 of 1 per cent on research. Dean Wm. A. Poison Not Held Responsible For Losses

Salem, Ore. Feb. 8.—Many persons who believe their stock has been poisoned by mixed feeds find upon laboratory analysis, that disease or wrong formulas rather than poison are causes of loss of animals, reports the state department of agriculture.

The department chemists have analyzed many samples of mixed feed in which poison has been suspected, but over a period of several years only one trace of arsenic in feeds has been found. In this instance, the trace was so slight it could not have been responsible for death of the animal.

The laboratory has found some cases where formulas have been so changed in home mixing that either the desired results are not obtained or considerable trouble has been caused as a result of this feeding. Such changes in formula are usually made so materials on hand may be used.

The safest rule to follow when poison feeds are suspected is to call a veterinarian at once, because immediate attention may avert considerable loss and damage. Then, if desired, have the department of agriculture run an analysis on the feed used.

The department points out that commercial feeding stuffs on the market today are manufactured by reliable dealers after formulas that have been carefully balanced and that moreover, the state commercial feeding stuffs law, amended in 1939, protects the buyer.

As a further suggestion to stockmen, the department urges those who mix their own feeds on the farm to consult the state college for proper procedure.
