Gas Expensive In England

Motorists in the United States can count themselves lucky when they consider the plight of the British motorist as revealed in reports reaching the Oregon State Motor Association.

A war-tax of 25 shillings (about $6.25 per horse-power) has been placed on all motor vehicles. The average American light car develops an S. A. E. horse-power of about 30—and would mean a tax in excess of $185 a year. In addition to this tax, there is a tax of 18 cents per gallon on petrol.

The petrol itself has been strictly rationed with cars of more than 20 horse-power receiving the maximum rationing of 10 gallons per month. Certain professional men who need the motor car in their work receive up to 20 gallons a month.

Another hardship that the British motorists is facing is the complete absence of highway and road markers. Immediately after the start of the war all signposts were removed, and motorists must "jineer" their way when off the main highways.

Because of the lack of petrol about 25 percent of the private cars of Great Britain are out of service and as a result many of the garages and filling stations have been closed.

No new cars have been manufactured since the outbreak of the war because the factories are being used for munitions work—and the price of all cars, both new and used, has risen about ten percent.
