Wheat Raises General Average

Improvement in wheat and some other early crops nearly offset a decline in a few late crops during July so that the general crop production prospect early in August was that the total in the United States will be about average, according to the monthly report on the agricultural situation just released by the O.S.C. agricultural extension service. Considering stocks carried over, supplies of most crops will be ample, the report states.

Wheat crop prospects improved during July and the production estimate was boosted to 761 million bushels which is slightly more than last year and slightly above the 10-year average. Data given in the report indicate that further increase in the already large wheat surplus will be registered in the carryover figures next July 1.

The expected increase in stocks is estimated on the basis of 675 million bushels needed for domestic uses, leaving 86 million bushels out of this year's crop, and 280 million carried over from last year available for export or carry-over next year. Exports during the 1939-40 marketing season amounted to only 46 million bushels and the prospects for wheat shipment over seas from the United States appear even poorer than a year ago. Domestic prices are being supported by the government loan program and are at a high level compared with world wheat prices.

Rather complete information is given in the report on the wheat market outlook for 1941-42 as an aid to growers in planning crop production in 1941. The report, which is available free from county agent or direct from the college, also contains a review of the general farm price situation, with data on prices received and paid by farmers.
