First Steps Off Curb Dangerous

With the man afoot the chief victim of traffic accidents in cities, Dr. E. B. McDaniel, President of the Oregon State Motor Association, declared today that the pedestrian must be particularly wary when taking the first few steps off the curb.

"A survey of accidents involving pedestrians in a large Eastern city, cited in the A.A.A. manual, Pedestrian Protection, showed that first steps off the curb are most dangerous," Dr. Daniel said. "Visible reasons for such accidents are lack of attention on the part of the person afoot, and obstruction to vision due to parked cars so that the pedestrian does not see the approaching vehicle, and the driver has only a few seconds' time in which to see the walker after he leaves the curb."

"Not only are the first few steps dangerous, but the middle of the street has a high pedestrian accident rate. An analysis of pedestrian fatalities in a city on the Great Lakes in 1939 showed that three out of four occurred in the middle of the street, or in the traffic lanes immediately adjacent to the center. Conclusions reached in the study were, (1) that the pedestrian expected the motorist to stop or slow down and permit him to cross safely, (2) that the pedestrian expected to be seen even though visibility was poor and he was wearing dark clothing at night, and (3) that pedestrians many times underestimated the speed of the approaching vehicle. Pedestrians, too, are apt to become confused in the middle of the street, with vehicles bearing down on them from both directions."

In connection with the Club's Pedestrian Protection campaign, Dr. McDaniel urged motorists to slow down at intersections, and be particularly alert for pedestrians who might step out from behind parked cars. He urged pedestrians to cross on green traffic signals only, to wait until the way is clear before crossing unsignaled intersections, and not to start across when cars are dangerously close, and to wear or carry something white at night to increase their visibility.

And Thanks, God, for a Safe Crossing

These newcomers from England are saying their prayers, and among a flock of things that they are thankful for, they are thanking the Almighty for getting them safely to the United States. All are from Garden City, England, and they are stopping temporarily at the Gould foundation.

Unemployment Audit Being Made

With the ending of the base year on which 1941 benefits are to be paid, field representatives of the Unemployment Compensation Commission are making every effort this month to secure from more than 10,000 covered employers complete wage records for the past four quarters. Base pay received between October 1, 1939 and September 30, 1940, claims for 1941 jobless insurance may be filed beginning December 11, 1940. Field Auditor W. A. Fowler will be in the east Oregon territory for most of October to contact employers of four or more workers covered by the act.

MORO SCHOOL NOTES

—By Mary Kenny

Last Friday the first volleyball game of the season was played, with Moro and Grass Valley on the latter's floor. Both Moro teams were defeated, losing by a considerable margin.

Freshman week ended last Friday with a quiz show in assembly, followed by refreshments of water and crackers.

The first edition of the "Optimist" will be out Friday. Claudine Thompson, the new editor, informs us that with an entirely new staff, it will be different from preceding years.

A cold epidemic has been passing among the students and also the faculty members.

Dedicate Plaque

A bronze plaque to "Printing House Square" in New York city, will be dedicated September 16, marking the 500th anniversary of printing from movable type.

Alien Registers

Frank Higginson, 77, a Canadian now living in the United States, makes a close scrutiny of the alien registration blank before filling out the form at the Brooklyn post office. Millions of aliens now living here must be registered and fingerprinted within the next four months.
