CONDITIONS BETTER

Improved domestic demand for farm products, smaller exports, higher average prices and larger total cash income are some of the prospects for agriculture seen for next year by the national agricultural outlook conference recently held in Washington, D. C. L. R. Breithaupt, extension agricultural economist, represented Oregon State college at the conference.

Professor Breithaupt is now at work preparing summaries of the conference findings as they apply to the various commodities and products of particular importance in Oregon. These will be issued from time to time as prepared.

Farm income, including government payments, may be the largest since 1929 if present indications materialize, the conference decided. This will not be all gain to the farmers, however, as increased costs of commodities and services used on the farm will cancel part of the prospective income gain.

Total production of agricultural commodities next year may be a little lower than in 1940, but the total supply including carry-over will be fully adequate for the country's needs, it was predicted. Products of dairy and poultry products, meats, and some fruits and vegetables are expected to be in the best position as their production is largely for the domestic market.

The outlook for such crops as cotton, wheat and tobacco is less promising, the conference pointed out, and the principal support to prices of these export commodities will be the government loan and export programs.

National defense in relation to agriculture was given special consideration by the conference, Breithaupt reports. The total "agricultural plant" is in the best condition for several years, with soil productivity increased and man power more than adequate for any emergency, it was held.

Industrial expansion for national defense is chiefly to be credited with expected increased employment, more consumer income and consequent improved domestic demand for farm products, the conference reported.

Just to make sure that alumni of the University of Oregon don't forget the dates for the annual Homecoming event November 8, 9, and 10 these student committee members marked a huge calendar. They are, left to right, Milly Jayne Edwards, Glendale, California; Jean Hoover, Jean Sales, and Nelda Christenson, all of Portland.

HI-WAYS TO HEALTH by ADA R. MAYNE OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

Many persons fear the dark because they cannot see at night. Perhaps this is night blindness, which would make it especially hazardous for the automobile driver at night. Night blindness, as well as some skin conditions and frequently recurring infections of the respiratory tract, may be helped or even prevented by adding adequate amounts of vitamin A to the diet.

Of course, it is possible to buy vitamin A in bottles and boxes at the drug store; but normal adults can get sufficient vitamin A in their daily diet and more cheaply. An even greater advantage in using natural foods to generate healthy eyes, skin and mucous membranes is that the colorful green and yellow foods add enjoyment to eating.

One has only to think of a table of cheese, egg yolks, carrots, apricots, butter, squash, sweet potatoes and pineapple to know why. In summer, the cool of gay green things sooth and refresh; while in the winter the disappeared-from-the-earth color adds life to our sluggish appetites.

The cow belongs in this picture. She is able to take the green food which contain the important yellow pigment called carotene and manufacture vitamin A rich milk. And from this butter - with its delightful flavor, color and rich quantities of vitamin A. Did you ever as a child jab a dandelion stem under someone's nose or chin to see if that one liked butter? It was a never-fail test; one always did like butter.

As most of us today have become dose conscious, we constantly wonder whether our diet is providing too much or too little of the necessary foodstuffs. Unlike the dose on a bottle or box of medicine an excess dose of vitamin A is advised for promoting health. The minimum daily dose for an adult is one pint of milk and four tablespoons of butter. Children need two to three times this amount. For extra vitamin A be generous in your use of vegetables of green or yellow coloring. Remember the shorter the route from garden to kettle the better the flavor in vegetables and, too, that rapid cooking will preserve both flavor and color as well as vitamin values. Unduly dressing up a cooked vegetable with high seasonings and fancy sauces seems superfluous. If two vegetables are served, serve one buttered and one with a sauce. It may be a creamed sauce or for variety this Golden

739 Drivers Licences Revoked

A total of 739 Oregon drivers lost their licenses through revocations as a result of convictions for driving while intoxicated during the first nine months of 1940, it was announced today at the office of the secretary of state. This is an increase of 30 percent over the revocations for the same offense during the first nine months of 1939, when the total was 565.

Under Oregon law, revocation of the license of a driver convicted of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor is mandatory and the driver is eligible for reinstatement at the end of one year providing he can file proof of financial responsibility, which must be maintained for the ensuing two years.

During the month of September, 167 Oregon drivers lost their licenses through suspensions or revocations and of the 97 revocations, 90 were for driving while intoxicated.
