Fall Season Dangerous One

Recent rainfall should serve as a reminder to motorists that this is a time when it is wise to check the condition of the car in preparation for the approaching season of more frequent wet weather, it is pointed out by the public safety department of the Oregon State Motor Association.

Emphasized by the motorists organization was the fact that a rise in traffic accidents occurs regularly every fall and winter, indicating a need not only for careful driving but for making certain that various safety features of the car are in dependable shape.

The importance of good brakes, tires, and lights was stressed in a series of suggestions, as follows:

Check the lights regularly and carry extra light bulbs. Efficient lights, free from glare, are more necessary as the days shorten and the amount of night driving increases. Incidentally, remember that the law now requires use of the lower beams when other cars approach.

Have brakes in good order, but keep speed down to a point which will permit normal and safe use of breaks. In other words, avoid the necessity of sudden and excessive braking because of the danger of skidding on wet surfaces.

Tires worn smooth are an added hazard in wet weather and should be replaced with well-treaded ones.

Keep the windshield wiper in proper working condition.

"Take time to be safe in wet weather," the automobile club statement added, "Allowing a little extra time for reaching a destination is one of the things which help to avoid accidents during the winter months."
