In 1915 I was passing through this city on my way to New York City, a trip around the border of the U. S. A. I did not ride in a Cadillac or any high powered car. Before reaching Phoenix I had come up from El Paso where I had crossed over from Old Mexico, when I drove to the bridge that crosses the RioGrand river between Juarez and El Paso which I asked for my passport. I told the officers I had none. Then they wanted to know how I got over the border. Now it seems some Mexican had pushed me across on a crude ferry, down near Sierra Bank, that was near where Company M-15 Cavalry was camped. You may recall General Pershing was chasing Villa over the Border at the time. In fact, I camped at Fortsburg N. M. two nights before Villa had shot up the town. Well, day dreams carry me back.

Well I will tell what I started in Phoenix, Arizona, this country is level and the streets and wide and long. Phoenix is scattered over a lot of ground, some good buildings and some not so good. The streets are named after all the Presidents up to F.R.D. and they will have to name three for him. The avenues run north and south, the capitol is west on Washington street, a fine building, the city hall is near Central Avenue, the Post Office near Central Avenue. Near the P. O. is the Westward Ho hotel a sky scraper.

Right now the whole city has gone rondo in a big way, all wearing big hats, boots and flashy ties. Even the street car conductors are wearing big hats and boots. I saw two young negro girls walking up the street today, they had on big cowboy hats and light colored boots, of course, their stockings were black. In front of Porter's big saddle shop they have built right in the street a corral and bunk house. Selling tickets at the bunk house. Their Rodeo is for the worlds best riders and will be held February 13 to 16.

For flavor, Arizona has California beat on oranges and grapefruit. All over the street park-

We are sending a Mexican souvenir from Laredo, Texas to avoid paying duty. Seems we can each carry out a hundred dollars worth of junk (we have around twenty-five) duty free, but if we attempt to mail it out, we have to pay duty which amounts to 50 percent of purchase price.
