BOYS AND GIRLS AID SOCIETY CARES FOR MANY

He was found two years ago in a dark, dingy attic room tied to a bed post—pathetically small, pathetically neglected. His tiny body was covered with ugly bruises and sores. He was abandoned, a one-year-old, by both parents—abandoned, abused and alone.

But today Tommy is a healthy, wholesome child whose eyes light at the sight of a new kiddy-car, whose sturdy legs carry him happily about his play. He has new parents, a new home, love and affection which he had never known before. He has a chance now—a chance to live and grow up like any other little boy.

The 55-year history of the Boys and Girls' Aid Society has written happy endings to more than 7,300 of these stories. These thousands of children have been brought to the doors of the society from Oregon's cities, towns, and country. Some of them are abandoned, some of them have lost their parents; still others are relinquished temporarily by parents or relatives until a home can be re-established. They all need food, clothing, and a home.

The Boys' and Girls' Aid originally was established to care for stowaways on sailing vessels and homeless, parentless waifs who haunted the streets for a better place of abode.

A new system of child care was inaugurated in 1939, conforming with modern and proven social welfare practice. The foster home plan, on which the organization now operates, places all the children under supervision in homes with private families. The society finds the homes, places the children and provides funds for board, supplies clothing and medical and dental care. The Boys' and Girls' Aid Society today is an up-to-date, efficient child welfare agency, staffed with skilled, experienced workers, an organization geared to meet the physical and emotional needs of the dependent child. Its primary rule is to keep the child happy and healthy.

Funds are provided through state and county aid, through a yearly allotment by the Portland Community Chest, through endowments, contributions and memberships. At present, a fund raising campaign is being conducted on a state wide basis to raise money needed to meet the rising cost of living—to buy shirts and shoes and overalls for the boys, and dresses and coats for the girls who comprise the society's family—to buy glasses for children with defective eyesight and to pay the doctor for setting broken arms and treating cases of measles.
