COLDSTORAGE OF FRUITS NEEDS STUDY

Advance preparation of fruits and vegetables for freezing is one of the chief factors of success or failure in the use of storage lockers, says E. H. Wiegand, head of food industries department at Oregon State college, in the latest revised circular on "Freezing Fruits, Vegetables and Meats." This circular, available from any county extension office, contains general directions for handling foods in cold storage and includes a tabulated list of fruits and vegetables with brief directions for handling.

In general, fruits require no preliminary treatment except washing and sorting. These exceptions are apples, peaches, and apricots, which require either pitting or peeling, and even blanching to prevent the browning of the surface. Apples and peaches are also sliced for ease in handling and better absorption of sugar. In handling vegetables scalding or blanching is an essential step in the freezing process. Unless treated in this manner the vegetables will spoil or change so as to be undesirable.

Various kinds of containers are recommended by Professor Wiegand, including glass jars which are used in ordinary home canning. Lacquered tin cans with slip tops may be obtained and these are usable year after year. Waxed paper containers are suitable for use once, but are not safe to use a second time with liquids.
