Farmers Get Big Crop; Big Prices Seen Probable

The old rule of big crops bringing low prices is apparently not holding good this year. Although crop prospects in the country as a whole are as favorable as during the last three years, which were good seasons, further gains have been made in the general farm price level, according to a report on the agricultural situation just issued by the agricultural extension service at O. S. C. Gains in industrial workers' incomes have strengthened domestic demand, while a moderate increase has occurred in exports owing to the lend-lease program.

The gain in foreign demand for farm products is only moderate and mostly for hog products, some dairy and poultry products, and some specialty crops. The general export outlook remains poor as no marked increase in exports of wheat, fresh fruits, or cotton is expected.

The income of industrial workers is already about 20 per cent higher than the 1940 average, the report says, and the Oregon farm price index shows a similar percentage gain in the general price level. The greatest gains have been in prices for meat and wool truck crops, and poultry and dairy products which respond promptly in price to changes in consumer purchasing power.

Farm costs have increased only moderately during the past year, compared with prices for farm products in general. As a result, the purchasing power for farm products is higher than a year ago. The exchange value of some items is above or near parity, particularly the "domestic type" products. The exchange value of most of the "export type" farm products is still below parity owing to surpluses in relation to market demand, and relatively high prices for some items of farm expense.

On the whole the exchange value of farm products is now around 90 per cent of the 1910-1914 parity. Relatively low prices for grain, fruit, cotton, and some other farm products account for some of the disparity which remains. The remaining disparity is also accounted for partly by relatively high price indexes for farm machinery and building materials, with higher taxes and farm wage rates also affecting farm costs.
