IT CAN HAPPEN HERE One night last summer, so-called "harmless brush fires" merged on the edge of Westimber, Oregon, and half an hour later the little community looked as you see it in this stark photograph, taken next morning.

IT MELTS IN YOUR MOUTH

America's favorite dessert literally melts in your mouth - for, of course, it's ice cream. Certainly nothing can surpass ice cream as a dessert, no matter what the season nor how many interesting desserts are thought up.

Once considered a luxury, ice cream is now an every day food that is delicious and nutritious. Ice cream is rich in proteins, minerals and vitamins of milk and for this reason is valuable in the diets of old and young alike. Every home maker knows that there is no more attractive way of serving milk to the family than in good ice cream.

The adaptability of ice cream is pretty important to a home maker right now during the hot summer days when the heavier desserts have lost their charm. Plain ice cream or sherbet is delicious and refreshing and give us a chance to savor every bit of the flavor. But, of course, the time comes when we like to dress ice cream up a bit and its versatility in combination with fresh fruit and berries, with fruit juice, in filling tarts, or mashed with fruits for frappe's is undeniable. But whether you serve ice cream just plain or top it with a sauce makes little difference—just have plenty and watch it disappear.

Although you may be loyal to peaches and cream, we give you

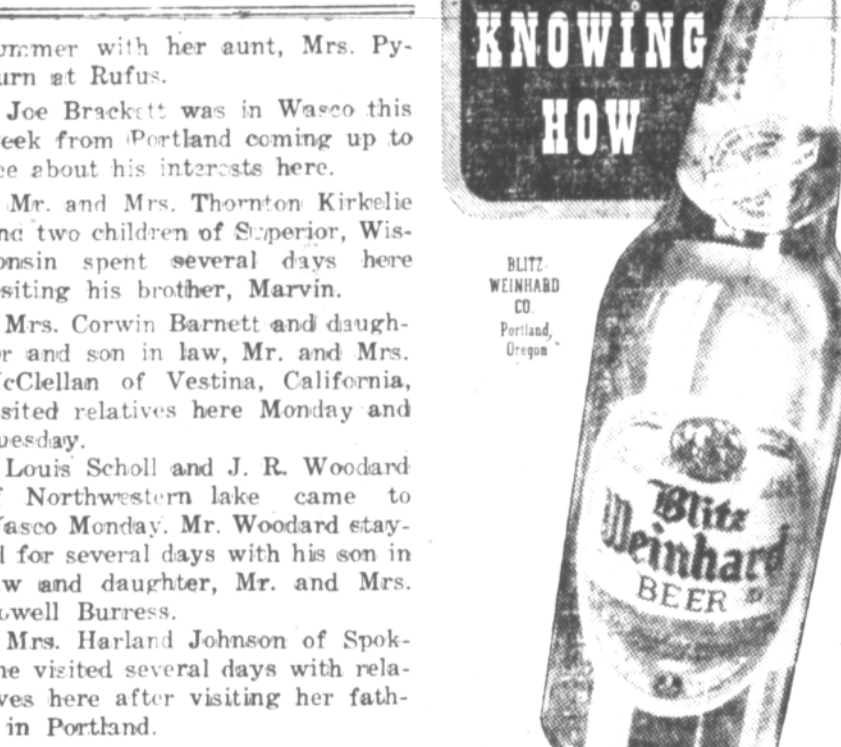

these recipes to prove that peaches and ice cream are equally delicious.

Peach Tarts

Cover the bottom of individual pie shells with sweetened peach slices and fill with ice cream. Top with meringue, taking care to cover ice cream completely; brown quickly in a hot oven, 450 degrees. Serve at once.

Peach Ice Cream

One cup powdered sugar
One fourth tsp salt
One cup top milk
One cup gelatin
One fourth cup cold water
Two cups fresh peach pulp
One cup whipping cream

Soak the gelatin in cold water for five minutes. Dissolve the gelatin over hot water and add the milk a teaspoonful at a time. Add the sugar, salt and peach pulp. Stir well and fold in the stiffly beaten whipped cream and flavoring. Pour into a refrigerator tray and freeze. Stir every twenty minutes until the mixture is firm.
