Farmers Quizzed About Lending Trucks To US

Trucks and bus owners in Oregon were urged today to make complete returns this week in the national defense truck and bus inventory launched last week, in a statement from Earl Snell, Secretary of State and Oregon chairman of the Highway Traffic Advisory Committee to the war department.

Questionnaire cards were sent out last week to owners of trucks and buses in this state. Owners are asked to give the information sought in the survey and place the cards in the mail immediately.

Purpose of the inventory is to set up detailed central and regional records of all trucks, buses, freight trailers in the country. With the aid of these records, plans will be developed for more effective use of highway transportation in the assembly of defense industry materials, delivery of military and civilian supplies, relief of dock and terminal congestion, and movement of passenger traffic in emergencies.

Oregon has approximately 65,000 vehicles which are included in the survey. The owner of each vehicle has been asked to report its make, capacity, kind of body, time of year the vehicle is most urgently needed by the owner and whether in an emergency he would be willing to lease or hire the vehicle to the government.

Owners who have received these cards but who have not yet filled them out and returned them are urged to do so at once in the interest of furthering the nation's defense effort.

Tomatoes Rich In Vitamins A and C

Tomatoes are so plentiful in Oregon and useful in so many ways that most home makers find it both convenient and profitable to store large quantities of them for winter use, says Lucy A. Case, extension nutritionist at Oregon State college. The belated good weather this fall has extended the season, making it still possible to obtain canning supplies.

Tomatoes are the easiest of all vegetables to can, Miss Case adds. Because they are an acid vegetable, all they need for processing is the heat of boiling water. When placed in jars hot they need only 10 minutes in the boiling bath. If packed cold 45 minutes is needed.

In canning tomato juice, the best way to save all the food value is to heat the tomatoes just enough to separate the juice, about 190 deg. F., or just below the boiling point. These are then sieved immediately, as exposure to air causes loss of vitamins A and C. After sieving, the juice is canned immediately, preferably by the hot water method. If the open kettle method is used, the juice is best brought to a boil quickly without stirring.

A question frequently asked is "How does tomato juice compare with orange and grapefruit juice in vitamin C?" Miss Case says that, cup for cup, orange juice has about twice as much vitamin C as tomato juice, but, dollar for dollar, you may easily get more vitamins for your money in tomatoes. Two tall glasses of tomato juice a day would cover the vitamin C needs of the average person, although most people, of course, get a considerable part of their vitamin C in other fruits and vegetables.

Incidentally she advises against using soda in making cream of tomato soup, as the alkali destroys most of vitamins B and C. Mature tomatoes that have reached their full size but haven't turned red are as rich in vitamin C as ripe tomatoes.

Lady of the House (reprovingly). "These biscuits appear to be smaller than usual."
