Garden Growing Urged On Everyone

Oregon's victory garden program, launched officially by a state wide garden conference held at Oregon State college, is going to be more than a campaign to increase quantities of just any kind of garden produce. Instead it is to be directed as well toward the production of well balanced gardens which will provide the best nutrition for the family. This was determined with the adoption of the report of the special committee of the conference dealing with nutrition, storage, and preservation.

Vegetables are no longer considered merely vegetables, to be arranged in alphabetical order or perhaps in seasonal order in planning a garden. Instead they are grouped according to their contributions to the diet, pointed out Mrs. Inez Langdon, Scappoose, committee chairman. Here are the groups of vegetables from a nutritional standpoint and the principal members in each group:

- (1) Tomatoes.
- (2) Leafy vegetables - cabbage, kale, spinach, mustard greens, turnip greens, Swiss chard, Brussels sprouts, endive, and lettuce.
- (3) Green vegetables - green beans, Italian broccoli, green peppers, asparagus, and peas.
- (4) Yellow vegetables - carrots, sweet potatoes, yellow squash, rutabagas.
- (5) Potatoes.

Individual families will want to choose among the specific kinds in each group but some from all groups are necessary to give the best balance as far as nutrition is concerned, it was pointed out.

The victory garden program, aimed at increasing the number of farm and home gardens in Oregon by some 16,000 units in 1942, is to be handled in such a way as to avoid undue waste of materials and effort such as occurred in the first world war, the conference decided. Those who have had experience in gardening, whether in the country or city, will be urged to do more of it this year, but those who know nothing about handling a garden will not be encouraged to try it.
