HI-WAYS TO HEALTH by ADA R-MAYNE OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

In the national nutrition for defense program the pre-school child is not overlooked for it is well known that health is the foundation for success at school. You realize that starting school is a turning point in your child's life - that he will have new responsibilities and new opportunities - and that he will be more on his own - that his whole life will be influenced by these first few years in school. It is not too early to use these months before the school experience to prepare your child for this turning point.

Getting a child ready for school means more than washing his neck and ears. It means helping him like the idea of going to school, and of being more independent. It means helping him have the best possible health so he can enjoy school and make the most of its opportunities.

First, take him to a doctor and dentist for examination. They will tell you whether any further medical or dental care is needed. Next follow their advice. If protection against certain communicable diseases is recommended, be sure to have this given. If any corrections are needed, be sure these are made. Follow the daily routine they suggest. All these will help prevent illness later and will help your child do good work in school.

Meals should be simple and nourishing. Regularity in breakfast, lunch and dinner should be routine for the pre-school as well as the school child. Irregular between meal eating usually interferes with normal appetite at meal time and often the foods eaten are unsuitable. If a mid-morning or mid-afternoon lunch is needed, and it does not interfere with the child's appetite, milk or fruit juice and crackers or plain cookies may be given.

Sleep should be regular. A child of this age should have at least twelve hours of sleep a day. A rest period during the day helps to prevent over tiredness. Play, also, is a necessary part of the child's day. Play which exercises the large muscles, such as jumping, running, and climbing, helps the child grow and develop. Children should have skillful guidance for some need encouragement to play actively while others must sometimes be led into quiet play so they will not become over-fatigued. Fresh air and sunshine should be enjoyed daily through play.

When meals, sleep and play are all part of a well planned day, they help build a vigorous child.

OSC Summer School Planned

In line with a general plan adopted by the state system of higher education in Oregon, the Oregon State college summer session this year will be operated as two five-week sessions starting with registration June 20, announces Dr. M. Ellwood Smith, director of the session.

The first session will be from June 20 to July 25, and the second from July 25 to August 29. By holding classes on three Saturdays in the first session and by extending the class periods to a full hour in the second session, the equivalent of six weeks' work will be condensed in each five week period, says Dean Smith.

Arrangements have also been made to provide regular sequences of courses in the summer session which will enable high school graduates to complete a full term's freshman work during the summer session in a number of fields. The opening date at Oregon State is later than at the other system summer sessions but the fees are uniform throughout, says Dean Smith.

THERE GOES 25 FEET OF POWER LINE!

Every time an American anti-aircraft gun lets go with a big 3-inch shell it uses up nearly 8 pounds of copper—the equivalent of 25 feet of rural or suburban power line. Copper, the most practical carrier of electricity, is also a vital part of all ammunition—the shell case, the primer, and the coating on the projectile.

Now that America is producing millions of shells a day, you can imagine how scarce copper has become. War production officials estimate their copper requirements at 5,000,000 tons to the end of next year. Only 3,200,000 tons are in sight.

If our army and navy are to have all the bullets they need to win this war, civilian use of copper must be drastically curtailed.

For example, power companies, normally the largest civilian users of copper, can no longer build long extensions to serve farms or suburban homes.

Nor can new electrical installations be made to serve industries without approval of the War Production Board. For in power lines, as well as in industrial plants, America must get the utmost out of existing facilities—if we are to avoid wasting precious time, materials and manpower.

Just as soon as the enemy has been thoroughly defeated, Pacific Power & Light will again continue its policy of extending copper lines almost anywhere to deliver its cheap, dependable electricity.

IF YOU PLAN TO BUILD A NEW HOME, electrify your farm, or make any changes in your electric service requirements, PLEASE SEE US FIRST. If it's possible we'll rearrange our present facilities to serve you. If not, you'll be saved expense and disappointment.
