FARM JOB BIG ONE

The magnitude of the food production program undertaken by American farmers, including those in Oregon, is not fully appreciated because it is not concentrated in one plant, but is rolling off an assembly line of six million farm units throughout the country, points out Robert Taylor, USDA wa. board chairman.

"Every time a cargo ship sails for Ireland with food for American soldiers and their allies, it carries the average annual production of 3800 American farms," Taylor said. "These ships are loaded with products that might have come from Oregon farms—dried eggs, dried and evaporated milk, cheese, canned and cured pork, lard, and canned and dried vegetables."

LeRoy Wright went to Portland Tuesday on business.
