Food Needed For Big Army Before Civilians

With an army of 10 million men in the offing, it is understandable why 1943 farm production goals calling for a food output even greater than this year's record total will be needed, reports R. B. Taylor, chairman of Oregon's USDAWE.

Selective service and army officials indicate that America's armed forces will number about 10 million men by the end of 1943. The food requirements of an army of that size will take a large share of the nation's food production. This required production is recognized as a national task in which farmers will need full support in meeting labor and other problems.

"One day's rations for such an army will take almost 41 million pounds, or 815 carloads of food," Taylor said. "That's food in concentrated form—canned, dried and dehydrated—that can be shipped to the fighting fronts."

Oregon's entire 1942 pork production would do little more than supply a week's meat rations for America's projected 1943 army, points out Taylor. The daily food requirements for 10 million men, based on the army's menu for expeditionary force "No. 1, will include 9,355,000 pounds of meat and meat substitutes, 4,654,000 pounds of dairy products, 738,000 pounds of cereals, 7,345,000 pounds of vegetables, 5,908,000 pounds of fruits and 12,764,000 pounds of other foods.

Food for the army comes first and unless farm production can be increased proportionately, less food will be available for civilians, war board chairman explains. Farmers are willing to do their job, he believes, but they will need more help. Farms will probably lose additional men to the armed forces and to war industries next year, hence city dwellers, women and school children will have to give even more help than they did this year and other labor aids will be needed if production goals are to be met.

Orval Thompson and his brother in law, Fred Braun returned Thursday from a fishing trip into the Burns country.

It takes 12,000 telephone calls to build a bomber!

And it takes a lot of calls to build ships, tanks, guns... to move millions of men and the supplies they need.

With vital telephone materials drafted for the duration, additional lines cannot be built at this time. But war calls must go through. So will you, please:

Ask yourself, every time you are about to make a long distance call, is this call necessary?

And when you do call, please be brief.

Your assistance, and your understanding of the magnitude and importance of our task in keeping the telephone lines clear for war calls, are deeply appreciated. Your help makes it possible for us to be of maximum service to our Nation.
