Record War Bond Sales Is Goal Of Women At War Week Nov. 22

WASHINGTON, D. C.—America's women in the cities and on the farms—in war factories and in their homes—are determined to make Women At War Week the greatest War Bond selling effort since Pearl Harbor.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt sounded the keynote for the Treasury Department's Women At War Week, Nov. 22 to 28, with an appeal to women to save "little things" to provide money for War Bonds.

"We women want to work hard, we want to be a part of this strenuous period because unless we are, we will not be able to face the men when they return and claim our share of the future responsibility for building a peaceful world," the First Lady declared.

The overall direction of Women At War Week rests with the Women's Section of the War Savings Staff under the leadership of Miss Harriet Elliott, Associate Field Director, and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Chief of the Special Activities Unit.

From coast to coast women in every community have made plans for torchlight parades, fashion shows, teas, rallies, store window displays, Stamp and Bond booths, pageants, civic sings, balls and mardi gras. In each locality administration of the one week drive rests with the local War Savings Committee which has worked out activities adapted to their areas.

Mrs. Morgenthau, in a special message for Women At War Week, declared that the spirit of America's pioneer women lives today more strongly than ever.

"The average American woman began to rise to new heights on Sunday, Dec. 7, 1941," Mrs. Morgenthau said. "This winter the average American woman will be spending less in order to save more to invest in War Bonds and Stamps. She will not, please God, ever have to fire a gun or fly a bomber. But she will, please God, always do everything she can to help buy anything—and the best of everything—that fires or flies or floats in this terrible war."

During Women At War Week volunteer War Bond saleswomen will wear an armband similar to the one being attached to the sleeve of Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., by Miss Harriet Elliott.

Oregon Sawmills Save Most of Wood

Sawmills of Oregon are now destroying only 18.6 percent of the "waste" wood produced in connection with lumber manufacturing, according to preliminary returns on a survey conducted by E. G. Locke, assistant professor of chemical engineering, who is working with the Bonneville administration on this project.

Returns from about a third of the mills representing some 70 percent of the state lumber production, show 27.8 percent of the waste wood is sold as wood, 53.6 percent is used by the mills and 18.6 percent is destroyed. Most destruction occurs in southwestern Oregon where nearby markets cannot absorb the output.

The study was undertaken both to locate fuel for prospective industrial plants and to uncover domestic supplies if possible. Progress has been made on both. Plants not yet replying to questionnaires are being contacted again.

"FOR 1¢ I SHEAR 23 SHEEP!"

...I'm the lowest-paid hand on the ranch!

Reddy Kilowatt YOUR ELECTRIC SERVANT

To maintain a soldier for a year requires the wool from 23 sheep. To raise that much wool entails a lot of care and time. But when the wool is fully grown, a skilled worker can shear it off the backs of 23 sheep in a little over an hour with the aid of only a penny's worth of PP&L's cheap electricity.

And when the wool gets to the mill, another penny's worth of PP&L's electric power operates the giant looms while they weave a complete uniform or blanket. Nearly 90% of America's wool production is going to war... and cheap electricity is speeding the job all along the way.

This is not an unusual example. In practically every phase of the Pacific Northwest's war effort cheap and dependable PP&L electricity is busily at work... in shipyards and airfields, on 12,500 farms, in hundreds of war factories, in food processing plants and army camps.

The same low-cost electricity that makes home life comfortable for you is making trouble for the Axis.
