NURSES NEEDED NOW

Sweet girl graduates of 1943 are being urged to heed the call to enroll in nursing schools, thereby signing up for an important war job. Girls registering in such schools will fill the gaps left on hospital staffs by the 31,000 nurses who already have joined the armed forces and other thousands who will follow in months to come. Because of the emergency situation training courses have been shortened. To meet the basic requirements for entrance to a nursing school a girl must be between 17 or 18 and 35 years of age. College training is preferred and most schools require high school science credit. A number of scholarships are available and applications should be made to the school of nursing a girl plans to enter.
