The Family Car Goes to War

Your family automobile is one of the vital means of transportation on the Home Front. Dad may not be the best mechanic in the world, but he can make necessary minor repairs that will keep your car in useful service. In wartime it is also patriotic to share a ride with a friend or neighbor.

More Lumber Available For Farmer Use

Farmers will be able to obtain lumber under a new rationing program, but even farm building will be limited to construction essential to increasing food production. A B Taylor, chairman of the Oregon USDA war board, reported this week.

The War Production board has allocated 500 million board feet of lumber for farm use during the next four months, designed to relieve a shortage created by critical war demands that have drained the nation's lumber yards. Oregon has been given 6,700,000 board feet, which will be distributed to counties on a quota basis.

Farmers who are unable to obtain lumber under existing procedures may apply to their county war board for a purchase certificate, Taylor explained. Approved purchasers will be given a certificate bearing an AA-2 priority rating. Dealers may extend this rating to mills to replace their stocks.

Lumber will be issued for maintenance and repair of farm buildings and new construction essential to production. The program excludes dwellings.

War demands of wood are greatly exceeding production, Taylor said. He cited the need of the armed forces for boxing and crating material, pontoon bridges, mine sweeper timbers, wooden ships and many other uses for lumber.

So that "we can substitute here at home instead of on the battlefield"—the war board chairman asked farmers to use substitute materials wherever possible. Fabricated building boards for inside or outside use, tile, brick, rubble masonry and concrete all can be used instead of lumber in many farm buildings and most of these materials are available without priorities.
