Fewer Die In Traffic
At least one traffic death was reported in Oregon every week during the first six months of this year, according to Secretary of State Bob Farrell.

The longest death-less day period in Oregon traffic during the first half of the year was the 8 day period April 23-30.

"An increase in the pedestrian fatality frequently is counter balancing the decrease in fatalities involving the collision of motor vehicles or non-collision accidents," Farrell said. "Pedestrian fatalities now constitute nearly fifty percent of the total traffic toll, whereas in normal times, they amount to around one-third."

Farrell urged pedestrians to accept the responsibility for their own safety in traffic by walking with greater care.

Pressure Cookers Safe If Kept In Order

Homemakers need not fear pressure cookers if they understand a few simple rules, says Miss Lucy A Case, extension nutritionist at OSC. One rule that is commonly misunderstood is that a pressure cooker requires at least an inch of water on the bottom to prevent it from running dry and possibly cracking the cooker. Even more water than an inch does not interfere with its operation.

A second safety rule is to take the safety valve apart each day that the cooker is used and be sure that it is not stuck with grease and rust. The safety valve contains a ball and spring which are adjusted to release the pressure in case it accidentally becomes too high. Most of the explosions that one hears about were due either to a clogged safety valve or to taking the cover off the cooker before the pressure gauge registered zero—the only safe place for it to be.

Maintenance of a temperature higher than boiling is necessary for destruction of dangerous bacteria. This high temperature is attained in a pressure cooker by steam pressure, not by air pressure. Therefore, the petcock of a pressure cooker is left open when the cooker is first closed to allow air to escape.

The mixture of air and water vapor which comes from the nozzle of the petcock at first feels cool to the hand. After several minutes it feels warm and then hot. When the temperature, tested by passing the hand through the jet of steam, three or four inches from the nozzle, feels hot it is time to close the petcock. Care is necessary that enough time is allowed to rid the cooker of air in order that a sufficient high temperature may be developed.

Retaining juices in glass jars during processing is difficult, in fact, complete retention is not always possible. Keeping the pressure steady and opening the petcock gradually after the pressure gauge reaches zero at the end of processing will aid in retention of juice. Loss of juice is not a problem in tin canning.

The moisture on the underside of the lid of the pressure cooker should be removed with a cloth before inverting the lid, because allowing water to run into the gauge may damage it. The pressure cooker is stored without a tight lid to prevent off-flavors. Pressure gauges are subject to inaccuracy and it is a good plan to have them tested each year by the manufacturer or through the county extension office. More complete directions for using a pressure cooker are given in extension bulletin 596 which may be obtained from county agents.

scarcely be acceptable to the public. The development of a new design would have caused unjustifiable delay in getting coinage under way, the demand for one-cent pieces having been heavy and urgent. A change in shape would present difficulty in stacking. Darkening the coin prior to its issuance would entail more practical difficulties than can be explained in a letter.

"You will, I am confident, be gratified to know that the change in the composition of this coin meant an annual saving of enough copper to meet the combined needs of 2 cruisers, 2 destroyers, 1245 flying fortresses, 120 field guns and 120 howitzers, or enough for one and one quarter million shells for our big field guns."

July in the North Atlantic

It's summer, but these bluejackets on a United States navy aircraft carrier scrape ice and snow off the flight deck as their ship lies at anchor at a North Atlantic port. The planes are Grumman Avenger torpedo bombers. A German publication recently explained the reduction in U-boat activity by stating that the use of aircraft carriers to protect Allied convoys had taken the Germans by surprise.
