Dear Norma,
I am on my 48 hour pass and am having a swell time. I got up this morning about 0800. I got cleaned up, obtained my pass and fooled around until it was time to go to church on the base. This was the second time I have gone in two days. Most of the farm houses have tile roofs but once in a while there is a grass or straw roof. It seems rather strange on a well built brick house to have a straw roof but there are a few that way. Most of the farms I saw are well cared for.

I had to wait a little while for the bus to bring me to the city I am in tonight so I went to a pub with another fellow and had a glass of lemonade, only they call it lemon squash. There were not any women present in the smoke room, as they call the room where the men buy their ale and bitters, because the women buy their beer in another room. It is something like the side door for the women, in the states, before prohibition, I guess.

I looked at a lot of the shop windows but everything was closed today, because it was Sunday. The streets over here are about the size of an alley with sidewalks about two feet wide. Even the highways are narrow. Several times the bus had to practically stop to let another wide vehicle pass, but the cars are so small that they get along fine on the narrow roads.

When I arrived at the city (I cannot say which city it is but it is not London) I went to the Red Cross to see about a place to stay. The Red Cross is sure swell to us. They have rooms here for soldiers which only cost 1 and 6 (25c) a night. They also have a dining room where you can eat at small cost. The Red Cross here is a big service club with rooms. The streets over in this country are not like in states but run every which way like a lot of paths in a picture, crossing and recrossing each other every once in a while.

The stores over here are fittingly called shops because they all seem to be small and do not take in whole blocks like ours. I got kind of tired walking so had some tea and cakes. That is one thing I like about this country you can go into a shop and get a cup of tea just like you do coffee in the states. You can also get coffee.

I saw a bobbie (policeman) and had quite a talk with him about the city and so on. It is a little difficult to find your way around, due to the streets running one way for a ways and then suddenly turning and running in a 90 degree angle from what it was before.

I also saw a few buildings that have been destroyed by fire and so on in the past. All construction over here is either stone or brick and mostly brick.

When it began to get dark tonight I had tea (supper) which consisted of meat, lima beans, french fried potatoes, and a couple of cups of tea. Oh, yes, bread. The bread over here is all brown bread. After that I went to the cinema and saw a Hop-a-Long Cassidy picture and also a picture entitled "The Feminine Touch," both were U.S.A. pictures. It was good to see familiar names and faces. Don Ameche played the leading male part and (I can't think of her name at the moment) a good looking brunette played the girl. It sure was good. After the show I went back to the Red Cross. It was dark but there was enough moon shining so that you didn't bump into people. The streets were crowded, however. At the Red Cross I had some more tea and cakes, also a bottle of pop something like Pepsi Cola.

I then came back to my room, got my stuff and took a shower. There was plenty of hot water so I just soaked and soaked. I am now in bed, with sheet. The first time I have slept between them for some time.

I didn't tell you about my room. It has three of us in it but is a big room about 18 by 16 and instead of steam heat it has a small fireplace which burns coke, making it very nice and cheery.

Oh, I saw a cabby and his horse and carriage tonight too, trotting up the street—that is the horse was.

Love, Edmond

Dear Folks,
I am fine and writing to tell you a little bit about a pass I had over the week end in London. I stayed at the Red Cross club they have here for us American soldiers. I saw a lot of the important buildings and places including Scotland Yard, various palaces, monuments, House of Parliament, Westminster Abbey. I spent about an hour there looking through it and hearing a little of the history of the church and so on.

I saw a movie "This is the Army" and sure did like it but it made me feel a little sad in places. The theater is as big, if not bigger, than any in Portland. They have subways over here in London for transportation and they really go. I like them much better than busses.

It was a little difficult to find my way about but I would ask people the way and they would always give me directions.

Your son, Edmond

and will mature on April 30, 1945, or earlier upon demand. Loans on corn are also to be at 85 percent of the parity price as of October 1, 1944, but will not be available until December 1, 1944.

The War Food administration will also buy wheat at the loan rates from farmers who are unable to ship to their normal markets, provided local storage is not available and the administration owns bins in which the purchased wheat may be stored.

The egg price support program puts major emphasis on the procurement of dried eggs, but a nation-wide carlot purchase program for shell eggs has also been announced. These activities are expected to be the chief means of supporting egg prices to farmers at the levels to which the War Food administration is committed.

The commitment previously announced was "not less than 30 cents per dozen in the spring and early summer and an average of 34 cents per dozen, basis United States average farm price." The backbone of the shell egg purchase program is to be the establishment of carlot prices for designated grades of eggs for 64 cities covering the United States. These prices are to be set periodically. The actual price the farmer receives for eggs may vary, however, according to the quality of the eggs and the area in which they are produced.
