White voting south, that Senators Smith and Caraway got the same treatment the voters have so often meted out to those no longer effectual in their jobs. The same theory can be easily elastic enough to cover the case of Senators Holman and Nye.

Smith and Holman and to some extent Nye, were haters. They were "aginners". They didn't like the administration or anything about it, and couldn't help talking about it down daylight and dusk. Everything that happened was fuel to their personal fire of hate. And the people became tired of it. Senator Caraway was named for sentimental reasons to succeed her husband and the sentiment has worn out. She comes into the group of ineffectuals for another reason.

Voters seem to have no permanent dislike for a good fighter, but a hater wears himself out pretty quick. If a private citizen, whose ways are normal, gets himself so mad at something or someone that he cannot help talk about it, he is shunned and those he does meet will not discuss it with him. His prejudice is too well known.

It does not follow that liking for the new deal defeated Smith or that dislike for it defeated its follower Caraway. Nor does it follow that Oregon is going for Roosevelt because Holman was defeated or that North Dakota is international minded because of Nye's close contest. The voters are just weeding out their representatives who are so "hepped" on one subject they are no longer quite normal.

Vice-president Henry Wallace, whose political throat was neatly cut last week, says that his defeat is no loss to liberalism. Henry is always talking about liberalism and always forgets that liberalism stands for freedom of the individual: freedom from interference by the state, an enjoyable condition which Mr. Wallace and his boss have done absolutely nothing to foster. Their interpretation of liberalism has been to be liberal with the expenditure of other people's money.

It is, of course, a European ideal. It comes when people do not have much faith in themselves or their institutions. It forfeits a very definite weakening in our American fibre. Earlier Americans set out to be heroes, not to worship them.

From the Observer, July 31, 1923
 J. N. Landry has been harvesting on the Mowry land west of Moro this week, which is reported to have made an approximate yield of 12 sacks to the acre.

Mrs. Lotus Kenny and children and her sister, Mrs. Frances Anderson, are enjoying a vacation development and post-war work for service men will not be ready by the time the men are discharged. That fear seems to be doing an injustice to the service men already.

The war is not over. Unless we move faster in Normandy than we have been doing it will not be over for a long time. A good speed for us is around two miles per day and it is over 800 miles to Berlin. Maybe our generals expect the Russians to capture western Germany instead of our armies, we wouldn't know about that. But so much talk about post-war as long as we are meeting strong opposition on all fronts only leads to lack of interest on the part of civilians. That does the fighting man no good.

So much has been said about post-war plans that the average citizen may get the notion that some sort of super world is going to evolve from the death and destruction of this war. As a matter of fact, the world will do well to hold its own after killing millions of men and wasting billions of dollars worth of material. The main thing that develops from war is taxation.

If we civilians must worry, let us do it about the war instead of about how easy we are going to settle things after it is finally over.

Now it is "Cotton Ed" Smith and Senator Hattie Caraway who are forced out into political darkness by action of the sovereign voters of South Carolina and Arkansas respectively. As usual the professional writers and talkers have a multiplicity of reasons therefore.

Being sort of a professional writer, it seems appropriate there fore to dissertate briefly upon these two defeats, partly to keep up our end in the profession and partly to express an idea to add to the general confusion. It looks from this vantage point, which is practically in a wheat field and a long way from the time. The makers realize that there is a pent-up flood of money which will be turned loose for articles long out of circulation or hard to get, and they wish to take care of the demand which they know is coming.

Reports from various U.S. employment service offices throughout the country disclose a situation with respect to returning veterans which had been anticipated but the extent of which was not fully realized. This arises from the fact that many of the younger men in the army and navy have received special training which fits them for a better job than they left when they entered the armed services. In numerous instances these men have refused to return to their former positions although their old employers would welcome them back. The problem of the employment service is to find these men work in lines conforming with the training they have received in the army and the navy. This is not always easy where the newly acquired skills are in immediate demand in the locality where the veteran desires to reside, and at times the complexities are baffling to say the least. It is but a sample of the situation which must be confronted when demobilization day arrives.

HOT WEATHER HABITS

Many people experience unusual fatigue, poor appetite and loss of weight in hot weather. These conditions may be aggravated this summer by the added tension that comes from concern over the war news and the extra hours of work that most everyone is called upon to do.

But peak efficiency for winning the war is needed from every worker this summer and tired people do not work well. It is the responsibility of everyone to use all means at his disposal to prevent and overcome the fatigue that is generally accepted as an unavoidable accompaniment of hot weather.

The right foods can help greatly in maintaining health and efficiency. Having the right foods in summer means eating three good meals a day, with special emphasis on certain foods which supply factors that are needed in larger amounts in hot weather. These foods are milk, fruits and vegetables.

When temperatures are high and people perspire freely, heat prostrations may result if the salt, moisture and vitamins lost through excessive perspiration are not replaced regularly and in adequate amounts. Drinking water freely, sprinkling table salt generously on foods, eating more raw fruits and vegetables, and using fruit juices, as orange juice and canned grape fruit juice and tomato juice, are good practices which help to prevent the ill-effects due to excessive perspiration.

Generous amounts of thiamine (vitamin B) are known to help prevent fatigue, so whole grain cereals, milk, dried legumes, liver and other meats, all good sources of this vitamin, should be used regularly. These foods will help to maintain the protein content of the diet at a high level also. Protein is another food essential needed to prevent fatigue and a factor often neglected in summer. In addition to the right foods each day, care should be taken to follow a regime that permits plenty of sleep, rest and fresh air each day. If such a routine is followed workers will come through this wartime summer with the least possible strain on health efficiency.

HERO WORSHIP

One occasionally hears the comment that it is time the administration was changed but we must retain Roosevelt.

Such sentiment (and it is sentiment instead of reason) is the sort of thing from which distasteful things grow. No doubt the German people felt that Hitler was superhuman and indispensable. In medieval times the people were trained to consider their rulers as governing by divine right.

It is opposed to the theory on which the United States was founded. Our forefathers did not think that anyone was empowered to rule by anyone but the people. They didn't think that the destiny of a people should be in the control of one man, however smart or popular. One mind, our grand fathers thought, was not capable of doing justice to the affairs of millions of other men, who also had minds.

An observer might have seen how, in the past eight years, there has come to be this hero worship of Roosevelt. It has grown on the less adventurous of the people, the ones with less confidence in their ability, until losing Roosevelt for them would be a break with a past as serious as leaving home for a hesitant youth of twenty-one.

It is, of course, a European ideal. It comes when people do not have much faith in themselves or their institutions. It forfeits a very definite weakening in our American fibre. Earlier Americans set out to be heroes, not to worship them.

WAIT A MINUTE

For the past two weeks some Oregonians have been worrying over fear that plans for post-war development and post-war work for service men will not be ready by the time the men are discharged. That fear seems to be doing an injustice to the service men already.

The war is not over. Unless we move faster in Normandy than we have been doing it will not be over for a long time. A good speed for us is around two miles per day and it is over 800 miles to Berlin. Maybe our generals expect the Russians to capture western Germany instead of our armies, we wouldn't know about that. MAN causes more FOREST FIRES than all other causes put together!

Pure and simple carelessness on the part of honest, law-abiding American citizens accounts for the vast majority of our forest fires. Authoritative figures reveal that MAN is the cause of 90% of all U.S. forest fires!

Why Are Forest Fires A Greater Danger Than Ever?

Lumber, a critical war material is vital, too, for peacetime reconstruction. Think of the forest fire destruction in terms of planes and homes:

- ★ More than 800 fighter planes could be built with the almost a million man-days which forest and woods fires drain each year from factories and farms.
- ★ More than 200,000 five-room homes—enough to house the entire population of Washington, D.C.—could be built with the timber killed by U.S. forest fires each year.

THIS IS AN Emergency!

Something must be done right now about brush and woods and forest fires in our Pacific Northwest.

IT IS IMPORTANT THAT YOU REMEMBER THESE RULES

1. CRUSH OUT your cigarette, your cigar, your pipe ashes.
2. BREAK your match in two, then pinch till it's dead.
3. DROWN your campfire; then stir, add more water before leaving.
4. ASK ABOUT THE LAW—and a permit—if you must burn; then follow safe rules, kill every spark.
5. ALWAYS BE CAREFUL. An extra minute of precaution may save vital watersheds and a hundred years of forest growth.
