Hyslop Memorial Fund Growing

Contibutions to the G R. Hyslop Agricultural Research memorial fund are arriving daily in state headquarters from many parts of Oregon and even other states, reports Dr. D. D. Hill, secetary of the fund and Professor Hyslop's successor as head of the farm crops department at OSC.

A state oganization with committees in every county is now engaged in raising such a fund with $200,000 as a goal, the income from which is to be used to perpetuate the work for Oregon agriculture to which Professor Hyslop devoted his life.

"Indicating widespread interest are out-of- state checks from a Minneapolis seed company, a Los Angeles firm, a captain in New Guinea and a farmer's supply company in Walla Walla." says Dr. Hill.

"Among farmers' organizations that have voluntarily contributed $100 or more each are the Powell Butte Farmers' club in Crook county; the Pendleton Grain Growers association, the Josephine County Cooperative Growers handling Ladine clover seed, the the Walla Walla supply company and numerous cooperative warehouses."

The single erganization most active in support of the fund is the Oregon Feed and Seed Dealers association, Dr. Hill reports. Through its secretary, Leon Jackson, the member companies have nearly all sent in generous contributions totalling thousands of dollars.

Individual contributions are ranging from $1 to $2000 each. The latter sum was given by a successful young farmer in Klamath county. Numerous unsolicited checks of $100 have come in from individual farmers and business men who read of the plan in the press and wanted to help.

Local committees have been urged by Dr Hill and other members of the state committee to avoid suggesting any individual quotas or otherwise telling anyone what he should give.

"Profesor Hyslop would have been the last man to wish any such procedure." Dr Hill emphasized. " He would want contributions only on the basis of what one wants to give and what he thinks he can afford."

SOCIAL INSECURITY

A couple of fleas decided to get married and settle down. And so they selected a big inactive dog and took up their abode.

Life was sweet and easy. Food and shelter were provided from a central source, and heat also was supplied by the generous animal. Freedom from want and fear had been attained. There was, in fact, a housing unit in every crinkle. All the fleas had to do was eat, sleep and multiply.

The dog seldom scratched, plunged into streams, or in any other manner disturbed the peace of his joyous inhabitants. He was kind never to put selfish, material rights before human rights. Thus the fleas enjoyed the abundant life. And they multiplied amazingly.

But the patient old dog, sore and unappreciated, finally grew weary. Unable longer to support the hungry and non-productive population, he wandered off into the underbrush and there gave up the ghost.

Then consternation reigned among the fleas. They ran frantically from one end of the body to the other, shouting that the economic system had let them down. There was some talk of suing the old carcass for lack of cooperation.

Many of the panicky parasites, disillusioned and dispossessed, perished on the spot, by this time totally incapacitated to search for a new livelihood. Others, bitter in spirit, trudged out to face a cruel world, and died by the roadside, trying to thumb a ride to the next dog.

A little more initiative and individual struggle, discipline and self-reliance and the fleas would be living yet. And so would the dog.
